An Admiral's View of Training Boys.

Rear Admiral Caspar F. Goodrich has some pretty advanced ideas regarding the training of boys. He holds that too many of our boys are mollycoddles who need stern discipline to make good citizens out of them. In an article in the American Review of Reviews he suggests the following military training for a boy of eighteen years:

It is hopeless to look to our schools for the inculcation of many habits and a respect for labor and equally hopeless to expect the average home to effect an improvement in manners. Can no means be devised for supplying these deficiencies?

To the writer the time seems ripe for just such a new departure. Briefly, he proposes universal military training, not service, be it understood. On the first of July of each year, he would send every American boy, eighteen years old, either to a camp or on board a battleship and keep him for one year under military or naval discipline, to be taught cleanliness, care of his person, implicit, prompt obedience, self-respect, respect for his seniors, good habits, sturdy truthfulness, the sense of duty at all cost, patriotism, reverence for the flag. Ashore the boy should be taught camping, marching, target practice, trenching, scouting, the use of weapons, etc.; afloat the rudiments of the man-of-war's trade. Those backward in their studies might receive enough schooling to enable them to pass a very simple examination in the three "R's" plus a slight knowledge of American history that its more important events and the deeds of our great men be not forgotten. From this training, none physically capable should be exempt. Rich and poor, high and low, all should pass through this grand school. As against the possible cry that "My boy cannot be spared" it is urged that every citizen owes something to his country, that all service implies sacrifice and that, in this instance, the sacrifice is small while the gain is immense.

Naturally, as the government would be giving something of incalculable value, there could be no compensation. It would house, clothe, and feed the lads and possibly give them a small allowance "for stationery and postage"—say a dollar a month. At the end of the year all would return to their homes, improved mentally, morally, physically, their productive efficiency enhanced beyond calculation. This is no theory but a demonstrated fact. In addition, they would carry away and disseminate an ideal of citizenship and civic duty now sadly lacking. One year is the minimum time required for military training and the maximum time the youth of the land can well be taken from vocational and educational life.

The period I name is that when the lad can best be spared. He has, presumably, just left the high school. He has not taken up his life work or entered college. It is also the critical time in every boy's existence. It is then, if ever, that he passes through the stage of the tough and develops into the gangster. Our reform schools and penitentiaries are recruited largely from lads of about this age.

At Movies Tonight

LYRIC.

"The Torrent of Vengeance," at the Lyric tonight. Judson Bigelow is the venerable founder and builder of Bigelow City, which lies in a beautiful valley at the foot of the mountains. Bigelow, presiding at the municipal dedication ceremonies, makes a speech of thanks, after which his son, David, addresses the celebrators. Citizens of Dunsmore, the rival town, witness the merry-making at Bigelow and return to Dunsmore and consult with Jacob Dunsmore, the wealthy owner of nearly all the land in the town that bears his name. They tell Dunsmore that something must be done to head off the fast-growing population of Bigelow City, or its success will cause many of the Dunsmore people to move to Bigelow City and thus greatly depreciate Dunsmore land values. Dunsmore bestows gifts on his only child, Mary, a beautiful maiden, and she curbs his bitter words against his enemy, John Bigelow. Mary is secretly in love with David Bigelow. They meet clandestinely.
