Bill's Laugh Fooled The Little Girl

Local sports think that a thing thrilling and indescribable is the laughter of Bill Bridge, city engineer. It remained for a ten-year-old girl, under circumstances unusual to express adequately the laugh that daily shakes the city hall. W. C. Beiman, vice president of the First National bank, tells the story: "We were in the vicinity of the Grand Canyon, descending a gorge, if I remember correctly. Suddenly the stillness of the canyon was broken by the crashing bray of a mountain burro, one of the small denizens, you know. A little Hammond girl in the party clapped her hands in delight and said, 'Oh, that sounds just like Billy Bridge.'"

The World of Sport

"Spenders on Trail of Dough," says headline. "Well, how the boy that can hammer away."

Would you listen to Lee Magee? The former Cincy and Chicago National League ball player, threatens to expose several baseball officials whose "infamous" workings removed Magee from the majors. The big news is due to break Saturday. Order your paper early.

After eight years court litigation a compromise has been reached by the participants and hereafter Dubuque college and seminary, a Presbyterian school of Dubuque, Iowa, will be known as the University of Dubuque. The other litigant, Dubuque college, a Catholic seminary, will select another name but it will not include the word Dubuque. The world will certainly rest easier, now that the controversy has been settled.

You can lead a ball player to the table but it's mighty hard to get him away before he's filled.

Witness the case of Abraham Lincoln Bailey, young Cub pitcher, who arrived at the Pasadena training camp carrying 203 pounds of flesh and yesterday weighed in at 210 pounds.

If Abraham Lincoln Bailey insisted on showing a president's name for his monicker, why didn't he do the job right and select William Howard Taft?

The Centrals of Indianapolis set a new world's high team game mark of 1127 pins at the American Bowling Congress tournament at Peoria. This beats the Orange Crush squad of St. Louis, which bowled 1113 at the tournament.

This looks like a good buy—batter even than Hammond road estate where hard house being fancy prices: Marvin Childs of Omaha has purchased Edith Carter, a trotting mare, for $7,000. According to the seller, J. C. Adams, the mare entered eighteen trotting events last season and won twelve firsts, including two $5,000 purses.

Middlebury college, wherever that is, has received a trust fund of $45,000 from A. Barton Hepburn of New York, who was graduated from the institution in 1871. The income will be devoted to college football and baseball.

Disappointment looms large on the faces of fight fans in the Calumet region as the news is broken that the Flynn-Ferrill glove tilt scheduled for Friday night has been postponed to April 2. There will be some re-arrangement of the fight card also.

Jules Cox, winner of the 1913 Indianapolis 200-mile race, is preparing for another invasion of the United States, with first honors in the eighth international Indianapolis sweepstakes as his object. He is now in Paris supervising the construction of three new Peugeot racing creations.

The Shelbyville races will be held at Shelbyville, Ind., on three days of the week of July 19, the week preceding the Edinburg races. Races run off last year by the Shelbyville Racing Association resulted in a loss of 83 cents to each stockholder.

Big league scouts have about exhausted all the usual sources of major league recruits and are turning to the "sand lot" and very amateur teams for possible material. In this connection the rapid rise of George Uhl with the Cleveland Indians is interesting. Uhl was picked up last season by the Indians and this season promised to be a winning hurler and hitter as well. He was formerly a "sand lot" player.
