

MOVEMENT GROWING IN POPULARITY

Business and Railroad Men Point Out Feasibility Of New Plan

That one of Hammond's greatest problems—the stoppage of traffic between the east and west sides of the city on its main east-west artery, State street—may soon be satisfactorily solved, is the hope of prominent business and railroad men of the city and leading members of the city administration.

Facts became known today that a quiet movement has been afoot for some time investigating plans whereby a subway can be built under the three railroads on State street, permitting pedestrians to go back and forth without the interminable cessation of traffic.

The preliminary investigation has gone far enough to determine that the subway is feasible and can be built at moderate cost. It has been done in other cities and can easily be done in Hammond.

If the present city administration can bring about the construction of such a subway, it will be a monument that it can always point back to and will be a crowning glory to its activities. Officials of the administration have already examined the feasibility of the plan and it is expected will be just as enthusiastic over it as any of the business men and railroad men who are interested.

Never was the need of a subway more demonstrated than it has been during the holiday rush now at its height, but at that the congestion at the railroad on State street has been growing as Hammond has been growing, by leaps and bounds until the present year has seen it become a condition eliciting volumes of complaint and criticism that nothing is being done to alleviate it.

Between 5 and 7 in the evening particularly, it seems that railroad schedules operate about the same time as the public travel most. Trains are made up and sent out of the yards and completely tie up street traffic. Monon, Erie and Nickel Plate cars follow each other and come from north and south, until sometimes people have to wait for four, five and even six trains entailing the loss of precious time, menacing health by having to wait in the winter blasts and placing human life in jeopardy.

The fact of the matter is that the subway would benefit the railroads as well as the public and they would undoubtedly be in favor of it. A prominent railroad man, in speaking on the proposition, said there was no reason on earth why such a subway could not be built. Business men believe that it is time the city took up the subway plan and by employing practical engineers, familiar with subway construction and experienced in its problems, get down to brass tacks as soon as possible.

A subway under the tracks aforesaid is one of the most essential things Hammond needs. "If more stations could be erected as well, the subway could be built on one side of the street as a starter and then on the other when necessary. The subway should be built regardless of the elevation of the tracks for if Hammond waits for relief from street elevation it will not get relief for years.

It has been suggested that the railroads interested be asked to get together on the plan and then an experienced subway engineer be engaged to go over the proposition immediately.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—President Wilson is today considering Christmas pardons for many prisoners in federal prisons. It was announced at the White House.

Most urgent and general pleas for pardon, which the president is considering is that of Eugene W. Dubs, a socialist leader, imprisoned for violation of the espionage act.

The president is also considering requests for general amnesty for all so-called political prisoners.

Secretary Tamm said that he would discuss the matter of pardon with the president today, but there is no intimation that the president is preparing to grant any sizeable number of Christmas pardons.

SALVATION ARMY NEEDS XMAS MONEY

Once more the salvation army of Hammond has taken upon itself the responsibility of seeing that the worthy poor of Hammond have good Christmas baskets. The children will also enjoy a Christmas tree.

"The money is coming in nicely this year," said Ensign Samuel Hedegaard this morning. "We have the Christmas letters on all corners and while people are giving a little each day, we need much money to carry out our Christmas plans. There are a lot of families in our territory who will have no Christmas this year unless we are able to provide it for them. If anyone is willing to send a check, I will get it if it is mailed to me at 415 East State street, and will mail a receipt."

The Christmas baskets will be given out at 1:30 o'clock Friday. Each basket will contain a peck of potatoes, apples, canned fruit, tomatoes, butter, bread, sugar, tea, coffee, milk, flour, a nice chicken and the Christmas number of the "War Cry."

CLARA SMITH CONFESSES KILLING OF JAKE HAMMON

REPORTER TRACKS HER IN MEXICO

Slayer of Politician Millionaire On Way To Ardmore, Ok.

BY SAM BLAIR (Staff Correspondent Universal Serv.) (Copyright, 1920, by Universal Service) (Copyright, 1920, by Chicago Herald and Examiner) (Copyright, 1920, by Sam Blair)

EL PASO, Tex., Dec. 20.—Clara Smith Hamon is on her way back to Ardmore, Okla., to face a jury on a charge of slaying Jake L. Hamon, multi-millionaire oil magnate and republican national committeeman from Oklahoma.

She will tell the Ardmore jury the story she told me last night in the public park at Chihuahua, Mexico. The story reached me in a climax with the account of the last meeting of Hamon and Clara in the Ardmore hospital after the shooting.

It closed with a benediction on the soul of the man that as strong as the conflict of emotions which now are in the heart of the woman accused.

"He was always cruel and snarling with me," she said, "and lifted my fingers to my hair so that I might feel the furrowed scar, result of one of his many blows," she said. Then she cried:

"That bullet which killed him should have been fired ten years ago.

"I was advised to do it—yes, by several of the biggest men in Oklahoma.

"But I loved him. I still love him. "He made his peace with God. He told me so that morning in the hospital after he had said he was dying and that I should go away and he would tell the world he had shot himself.

"He has made his peace with him and God and I forgive him on that day. He told me he would meet me in heaven—and I'll meet him there.

"But, oh, if I had only shown him the Ardmore people's love, the torn skin on my hands, the battered face of me after that night the bullet was fired. Had I shown these everyone would have believed my story. Will they believe, now that my bruises are almost healed?"

"I want to tell you of that day and night—of that night he was shot. For ten years you knew, we had been—I hated him and yet I loved him. That day of Nov. 21 we were to part for good.

"It was my decision and his. His wife was returning to him from Chicago. He had grown to be a power in money and politics. I had made him what he was, but I had no desire to remain with him and share in his glory.

"That day was to have been our last together. We promised each other that not a thing should happen to mar the sanctity of the time. It was sacred for me because he was the only man in my life. . . . The day passed. Instead of our being together, we had parted. He was forced to run constantly back to his office. Each time he came back to me he had more drink than before.

"Always in the past he had been able to achieve what you call 'carrying his liquor.' But as this day called for and I got stiff glances of him I became convinced that he was going crazy.

"I went to my room, No. 28. His room was 29. I locked the communicating door between. I locked my own door. I could hear him beyond the partition. He evidently was more angry than ever.

"I telephoned for some food. The waiter porter—Bill—came with the food. At his heels rushed Mr. Hamon. I would not put him out.

"I got rid of the porter. I knew another terrible scene was coming. "Mr. Hamon flung himself down on my bed. He was disgustingly intoxicated. He called me—he called me a terrible name. He wanted to know who I had been riding with.

"He knew—he knew—oh, how well, that never in ten years, since I was seventeen, had I ever so much as raised my eyes at another man. And yet on that last day he chose to pretend he was doubting me.

"His knife, Mrs. Hamon's knife, fell out of his pocket as he lay on the bed. I don't know why. It must have been providence. I picked it up and concealed it on the table under a newspaper.

"He got up from the bed. He grabbed me. His fingers went deep into my throat. I couldn't scream.

"He laughed that harsh, snarling laugh of his which he was careful not to give in public, but it was a laugh I knew well. He watched me quietly for an instant, that beastly sneer on his lips. He lighted a cigar and this is what he said to me:

"I would as easy slit your throat as I draw on this cigar."

"He felt for his knife—the knife I had picked up and hidden under the paper. Then he reached for his watch-chain. Last Christmas I had given him a gold chain with a knife attached.

Mandate Tonight by School City

Mandatory injunction proceedings were filed this morning in the Hammond superior court by the School City of Hammond, against Joseph T. Hutton, the architect. The action is brought to compel Hutton to turn over to the school trustees the plans and specifications for additions which are to be built to the Industrial high school building.

The complaint, which was filed by Attorney Crumpacker & Friedrich, says that the school trustees have contemplated building another wing to the high school building and that work must be started at once in order to have the addition ready for use at the opening of school Sept. 1, 1921.

In June, 1921, the board of education entered into a written contract with Mr. Hutton whereby he was to prepare plans, drawings and specifications for a Manual Training Industrial high school building and to superintend its erection. A supplemental contract was signed April 13, 1921, in which it was agreed to alter the plans already made and to erect thereon for the present Industrial high school building. This was to be arranged with a central or main building constructed so that two wings or extensions of similar style of architecture could be added later. The main section was completed in 1916.

Additions are now necessary in order to provide for the increased attendance at the school. The school board is now ready to make the first of these extensions, but Mr. Hutton has the plans and the plaintiffs say he refuses to give them up. The complaint states that the architect has said he will destroy the plans before he will part with them.

The complaint asks that Mr. Hutton be enjoined from refusing to give the plans to the trustees and that he be further enjoined from destroying them. The plaintiffs express a willingness to permit the architect to copy the plans if he desires to retain a copy for his own files.

Just Past 25, Michigan Representative Will Be the Baby of the House

Charles J. McLeod of Detroit, will be the baby of the house of representatives when congress opens after March 4. He had just passed the age of 25 before Nov. 2 and thus became the youngest member to have sat in the house.

When the news first became public on Friday of last week, Mrs. Jagger told the story that she had found the package of certificates in a yellow taxi last March, while enroute from Marshall Field & Co. to the LaSalle station in Chicago. Although others have tried to discredit her story, but she and her husband still stick to the original yarn.

Dozens of theories have been advanced since the bond mystery was brought to public attention, but so far no one connected in conducting investigations have been able to make any of them hold water.

"There are only two real sources of information," said Chief of Police Furbis of Gary to a Times reporter this morning. "If Mr. and Mrs. Jagger wish to tell you where the bonds really come from they can clear up the mystery, and if they still wish to maintain their secrecy we might as well cease our investigation unless we get hold of some one who they might have possibly confided in."

"The other party that might give us some information, if they cared to, is the First National Bank of Boston. The Federal Reserve Bank of Boston admits that they shipped these certificates to the First National, but the First National will not admit or deny that they were received nor will they admit that they may have been stolen from the vault of the institution."

POLICE MAKE QUICK RECOVERY OF FURS

Daring Robbery of Bernat's Store Nipped in the Bud at Forsyth

Following a daring robbery of the Frank Bernat ladies furnishing store, 595 Hohman street, Hammond, three negroes were arrested Saturday evening after an automobile chase by Hammond police.

Early in the evening a negro, later identified as Bob Williams, now under arrest, entered the store and asked to see some of the fur coats for women. He was shown several and then went away without buying.

At 2:30 o'clock the man returned to the store. He walked to rack containing some coats, seized one made of Hudson seal and valued at $475, and dashed out of the front door with it. Mr. Bernat at once notified the police.

Officer Singer rushed to be near waiting and was joined by Singer and J. Kelly. They found that the man had hauled a Yellow cab and arranged to be taken to Chicago. However, there was some delay in getting started as the car had to go to the office to get gasoline. This gave the police time to have officers on all streets leading out of the city. Singer with Officer Buehler, boarded another taxi and started out Calumet boulevard, where they soon learned that they were ahead of the other cab instead of following it.

At Forsyth corners Officers Harry Rimback and the two Horricks were waiting and were joined by Singer and J. Kelly. The driver of the Yellow cab, suspecting that his fare were up to mischief had insisted upon driving slowly in order to give police a chance to overhual them in case anything really was wrong.

Williams, who says his home is at 245 North first street, Chicago, had first gone to the State Lane hotel and picked up Mr. and Mrs. Morris Taylor, colored, and was taking them to Chicago with him. All three were easily arrested when the cab reached Forsyth.

Williams had the fur coat with him. He later took all responsibility upon himself and said that the Taylor's knew nothing of the theft. He had planned to pawn the coat immediately in Chicago. In fact this would have been necessary in order to pay his taxi bill as he had only a small amount of money with him.

Williams is being held under a charge of grand larceny which will probably be led direct in the criminal court.

WILD VARNs CONCOCTED OVER BONDS

Ownership of Bonds Seems to Be in Theory That Finders are Keepers

Gary is still wrapped up in its biggest mystery since the Rev. Edward Kayser murder at a secluded spot in the sand dunes of Tollester some five years ago.

Who the rightful owner of the $100,000 worth of certificates of indebtedness is, and now held by Mrs. Charles C. Jagger, wife of the owner of the Liberty Express Co., in Gary, is just as much a mystery as ever.

When the news first became public on Friday of last week, Mrs. Jagger told the story that she had found the package of certificates in a yellow taxi last March, while enroute from Marshall Field & Co. to the LaSalle station in Chicago. Although others have tried to discredit her story, but she and her husband still stick to the original yarn.
