WHAT TIME HAS WROUGHT.
 A writer for the Spirit Lake Beacon made an automobile trip from Spirit Lake to Sibley the other day. It was the first time he had made this trip since "those early years in the seventies when grasshoppers were leaving ruinous tribute upon northwest Iowa." Continually, he said, there came to his mind the wonders that have transfigured the face of nature and the entire situation within this generation of time. When he first made the trip, he says, the only reliable conveyance was the stage carrying the United States mails three times a week. For this distance of nearly forty miles the prairie trail wound around the sloughs and along the ridges, for there was little of road making at that day. The farmers were very poor, so impoverish by the predatory locust that the state was furnishing bread grain and other aid was coming into the hamlets for distribution. Some of the homesteaders had fled, leaving their shacks to crumble and their fields to the processes of nature. Those who held the fort were twisting hay for fuel and to eke out a meager existence were chasing the redoubtable muskrat to his lair. During those years of catering to the pests from the plains it was no picnic to pioneer it in northwest Iowa. Land was so low in value and so trifling in public esteem as to make its possession fairly a matter of reproach.
 This Spirit Lake writer saw a different picture when he made his second trip over this stretch of country and he marveled at the changes made by the march of progress since those "dubious days." No tract of wild and remains along the way, he says. Fine farms are in evidence everywhere and abundant crops broken continued prosperity. Fine fat draft horses have taken the place of the pioneer ponies. Carriages are owned at every farm house and along the way appear men and women and children bearing on their comely persons evidences of easy circumstances. The pioneer was the salt of the earth and the landscape in a state of nature has indubitable charm. But it is incomparably gratifying.

ing to witness the development of the passing years. The wealth of the city may make for rapacity and unhappiness and unholy ambition. The growth of the country distributes the comforts and benefits of progress of merit or of satisfaction, for usefulness and domestic enjoyment. The old days have gone never to return. They were by no means devoid of merit, but the blessings of the later years afford substantial gratification.
 There is not a stretch of country within the borders of the state but has witnessed a similar transformation. The only way and state is that which borders the streams and is subject to overflow during times of high water, and Iowa may be expected before long to see the extravagance of permitting such idle land to remain idle.

THE MAINE RESULT.
 The election of a democratic governor, two and possibly more congressmen and a democratic legislature that will elect a United States senator in such a rock bound republican state as Maine should bring the republican factionists to a pause for reflection. If the republicans persist in carrying their factional quarrels to the polls, instead of settling them at the primaries or state conventions, there will be the result in many states now controlled by the republicans when the votes are counted in November.
 All republicans must see the utter futility of carrying a fight to such an extreme as to bring on defeat. The most rabid factionist must see the danger of pushing party quarrels to the point of disaster.
 It is generally agreed among all republicans that the present session of congress has established a record for needed legislation that surpasses the efforts of any former congress. President Taft was given loyal support in securing the enactment of laws to carry out the republican platform pledges. The record is such that the republicans can, if they will, go before the people in November and win a sweeping victory at the polls. The republican president and the republican congress have made good. If it mated all the way, 100,000 to 200,000, marched in a line from the grand cathedral of Notre Dame to the stately arch at the foot of Mount Royal, about four miles distant.
 "The procession," said Father Bulger, "was composed of men formed from the various parishes of the city and adjoining states and districts. All the various societies of the church of the United States and Canada were members. They wore their regalia and it took five hours for the procession to pass the cathedral. Every available space from which the procession could be viewed was occupied for the whole distance. Following the procession were covered and temporary stands were erected in numerous places, some seating as many as 500 people. Seats sold for from $1 to $10 and window seats for $1 to $3. A rough estimate of the crowds along the line of procession varied from one-half million to one million people. Following the procession of church societies came 1,200 altar boys in their uniforms and immediately behind them were 500 priests in vestments and 1,500 priests in cassocks and surplices. More than 100 bishops and arch bishops with their chaplains preceded the papal legate, who carried the blessed sacrament. Following the sacrament came Cardinal Gibbons and Cardinal Logue of Ireland followed by Premier Laurier and the mayor of Montreal and a long line of civil officials.
 "The state militia in uniform with their guns and swords formed a line of guard on either side of the bishops and cardinals. Numerous military bands played music all the way and a choir of 2,000 men and boys sang the final hymns of benediction, which were taken up by several hundred thousand who were assembled at the foot of the cathedral. No word could describe the climax of the great procession. The perfect weather, uniforms, of every description, combined with music, ringing of church bells, bands playing and hundreds of cheering standards erected by the wayside. As the papal legate walked by carrying the blessed sacrament, those on the sidewalk, streets and hospice knelt in profound adoration to Christ, the most blessed sacrament. When the last benediction was given and the last hymn, "Praise God," was sung, the twilight was falling into darkness and the great crowds in a cheerful, good-natured way sought their homes and lodgings. One hundred special trains arrived during the morning and the depots were crowded with thousands of hours by thousands seeking their homes to return home.
 "The citizens of Montreal deserve much praise for the interest they took in the visitors to their city and they surely spared no pains or money to decorate their city. About $1,000,000 was raised to decorate the line of the procession with triumphal arches, lights and all kinds of ornaments. The religious communities threw open their houses to the visitors and placed their tables at $1.50 a day for meals and lodgings. The hotels generally were prepared to accommodate all applying without raising the rates, but in most cases reducing them. It was the general impression that it will be almost impossible to again equal the grandness of Montreal's eucharistic congress in this country or any other.
 "No hall of church could hold more than a small per cent of those seeking admission. The church of Notre Dame, the largest building could find space for perhaps 18,000 people and it was filled to the limit at every service. The midnight solemn mass Wednesday night could not be described. A choir of 1,000 voices, accompanied by organ and the grand organ and thousands of worshippers all combined to form a service that should be seen to conceive of its impressiveness. There were many sessions at which were discussed subjects of interest to both the clergy and the people. Many noted speakers were present and besides the impressiveness of the event, it had a great practical and educational side. England had many representatives, both clerical and laymen, who were full of enthusiasm. Every country in the world was represented and the United States had thousands of citizens there from every state. New York City came in ten special trains for Sunday. They found that Canada is already a great country and it will be to the advantage of both Canada and the United States to know each other better.
 "The trip was a most pleasant one over rail and water and the St. Law-

FATHERS FOLEY AND BULGER RETURN FROM BIG MEETING IN MONTREAL, CANADA.

WERE IN WRECK

Accident on Return Trip Was Only Happening That Marred the Visit of the Excursionists to the Northern City.

A railway accident, with but little damage, was the only thing that marred the visit of Rev. Father James Foley and Rev. Father James Bulger to the eucharistic congress at Montreal, from which they returned yesterday afternoon. When three miles out of Battle Creek, Mich., on the return trip, the train on which they were passengers, became derailed and an embankment from a broken arm suffered by the colored porter, but few of the passengers were injured. Father William Guinan of Albia was somewhat bruised when he collided with a fellow priest in the mix-up. A wait of seven hours and then a walk of nearly a mile to catch another train was experienced. The Ottumwa priests say it was an interesting and enjoyable trip and the congress was a most impressive event. They attended and participate in the meeting in Montreal was one of the greatest conventions of ecclesiastics and laymen ever assembled in the interest of religion in this country. Every nation of the world was represented and the climax and crowning event was the grand procession Sunday afternoon, when a countless number of men, estimated at 1,000,000, marched in a line from the grand cathedral of Notre Dame to the stately arch at the foot of Mount Royal, about four miles distant.
 "The procession," said Father Bulger, "was composed of men formed from the various parishes of the city and adjoining states and districts.
