RAZOR VICTIM TELLS OF FIGHTS

GEORGE BETTS CUT ACROSS THE SIDE OF FACE IS NOT DANGEROUSLY WOUNDED.

IS BETTER TODAY

In Interview During Breakfast He Relates Story of His Fistic Encounters Which Were Numerous.

After participating as victor in two fights earlier in the day, George Betts of Kirksville, Mo., was dangerously wounded by a razor cut in the side of his head Thursday afternoon near the Burlington round house.

The story of the troubles which befell Betts is best told by himself, for this morning despite what he had undergone yesterday, when his chances for recovery were very doubtful, he was bright and cheerful and ate his breakfast with the heartiness of a hard working man.

Things Were Against Him. In relating his experiences of Thursday, Betts stated this morning that things were going against him during the day. "The first trouble took place in the shooting gallery," said he. "I had shot eight rounds with the girl there and beat her. Then the little fellow (who is said to be Tom Reese of Bear Creek), that was in there, seemed to be jealous and said he could beat me throwing balls at the babies and I beat him. He then said that I might beat him hitting the babies but that was the only thing I could beat him at. One word brought on another and the big guy with a heavy mustache who runs the gallery, said he would bet me $25 that I couldn't last two minutes with the little guy. When I attempted to cover the bet he hedged and we went outside where I guess I lasted as long as the little fellow cared to go on and was pulled away from him."

Referring to his encounter with Tom Watts on South Union street, a little while later, when he gave Watts a black eye and otherwise used him roughly, he said "I don't think Watts had any business treating me the way he did. You see as soon as I started up the steps into the house where I was going for my dinner, Watts met me and tried to kick me off the porch. Well I went up the neighbor's side and over the railing and I guess I would have hurt him if it had not been for his wife."

Cut With a Razor. In telling of the last battle, that in which he was the victim instead of victor, Betts said, "Myself and a fellow named Fern, went down to the 'Q' yards and while there my partner called three other fellows over and we met near the round house. One of them proposed that we shoot craps and asked me if I cared to go in the game. I asked "I see the bones and told them the dice were no good. This offended the big guy, Campbell they called him, and he said the bones were his and were all right. Well, you know how quarrels grow to fights. This did. The big guy and I began to do battle and when things were getting interesting, this little fellow named Fisher, pulled a razor and before I realized what he was doing he slashed me across the right side of the face. The two of them ran when they saw how I bled and I gave chase. I followed them up the tracks and started after them across the railroad bridge. I don't remember much after we came to the bridge for I was nearly blind and you know more about where I was picked up than I do."

The call that first reached the police stated that a man had been stabbed in a fight near the Seymour cooper shop and that the men who done the stabbing were running toward the south side. Chief Gallagher, Officer Noah and Axel Nelson boarded a taxi and started across the river where they made a search for the scrappers. In the meantime calls followed others to the station calling for the ambulance and to the city physician, Dr. W. J. Herrick, asking that they go to Seymour's cooperative for the man that was stabbed. When Dr. Herrick reached there he found that the supposed dying man lay on the Wabash bridge near the post house. In the meantime the Milwaukee switch engine with volunteers kept switch engine with volunteers main portion of the bridge and picked up the apparently dying man and brought him to the passenger station.

Undertaker Helps. The city physician started for the hospital after looking Betts over and in a short time Coroner Elekter arrived. The undertaker was already there and so was the usual crowd. The uncertainty to learn of the excitement and showed that he could help in ante mortem as well as post mortem cases for he ordered his ambulance to carry the man to the hospital and assisted the physician and nurses in the operating room when the patient was being cared for. Betts is the son of a hotel keeper in

DAWSON BURIAL AT SHARON CEMETERY

Keokuk, June 12.—The funeral of W. B. Dawson who died in a hospital here this week and whose remains were taken to his old home in Van Buren county, took place at Sharon cemetery and was very largely attended. The Masonic bodies from Bonaparte, Farmington and other neighboring points were present, besides neighbors and friends. It is said that the procession if measured in line, would have been at least a mile and a half long. Rev. R. W. Lilley of Keokuk, conducted the services very impressively. Sharon cemetery is a beautiful resting place for the dead and is looked after with scrupulous care. The honor paid to Mr. Dawson's memory at this funeral was a very high tribute to him as a man and a citizen from the neighbors and friends who had known and respected him for so many years.

nized place in our system of public education.

"Vocational education," he explained, "is not educating for a vocation but education that leads toward a vocation. Introduction of the vocational idea has doubled high school education in the past fifteen years," he said.

"It is a strange thing," asserted Prof. Leavitt, "that the school system is organized as if desire for a literary education were the common lot of mankind. This is a fatal mistake. We must be willing to sacrifice some of our glorious traditions in order to bring about something infinitely broader and better, a universal education."
