COUNTRY JOINS WITH OTTUMWA

common welfare and advancement of all the people of the county.

Many Speakers.

Talks were made by J. W. Neasham, S. L. Nequist, W. A. C. Brown, M. B. Hutchison, E. E. Moore, A. H. Nelson, J. M. McElroy, A. R. Bluhm, A. Odenwelder, Rev. P. O. Bersell, George Haw, M. L. Truitt and J. B. Sax.

J. W. Neasham in his remarks explained what the retail merchants' association is and what it is not, saying that it is not a price fixing organization, but rather an association to protect the business man from fake advertising schemes and kindred devices for muling the merchant.

He alluded to the value of trade excursions to the community and referred to the work that is being done at Ames to make the Iowa farmer the most practical of all agriculturalists and leaders of all American farmers.

He pointed out the advance of farm life that places the farmer on an equality with the town resident for conveniences and comforts. The live stock and produce shows were urged to replace the old county fair and to build up interest in things agricultural and he pledged the support of the business men to find a place for properly displaying the exhibits of the farmers.

Newquist Originates Plan.

In a talk that was full of wholesome stories, all of which carried some moral which tended toward the uniting of the city resident and the man from the county, L. J. Newquist held the attention of the banqueters for some time. He pictured the interdependence of farmer and urban resident, showing in what way each depended on the work of the other and the need of cooperation if each would obtain the best results.

His talk teemed with the get-together spirit and he was accredited by the promoters of the joint banquet with being the originator of the idea of holding such a gathering. His knowledge of what the Iowa farmer is doing to make the state known over the world was shown in the manner in which he related the crop statistics and compared them with his hearers might appreciate their magnitude.

W. A. C. Brown, one of the active farmers of the county, when called upon had but a few words to say but they teemed with the boost spirit that begets a bigger and more active community which will call attention of the world to Iowa, and of the other counties of the state to Wapello. He stated that in looking over the hall he could see but few if any who were not farmers at one time as many of the business men of the city were sons of farmers and had been raised in the fields. He urged the continuation of the good fellowship exemplified in the banquet and expressed the hope that it grow.

Hutchison Talks of Market.

"The man who inflates things is the man who does things," said M. B. Hutchison, who was the next speaker. This well known business man and member of the federal reserve bank of Chicago, cracked some hard facts to the assemblage. He stated that he knew of nothing that could have so salutary an effect in welding the city and country together as a common working force for the advancement of city and country as still the banquet of the evening. He told of the need of the farmer to learn his market and of the duty of the business man, and his willingness to help the farmer to find his market. He alluded to California and the habit of the people of that state to boost and advertise. In the comparison between Iowa and California he showed how much more able Iowa is to produce things that make for wealth than California, but that Iowans do not tell the world about it. He urged scientific farming to make Iowa farms still further outstrip California in producing crops at the same time make this state's farm land more valuable.

Mr. Hutchison urged that the farmer take interest in the home market and that the business men give a prize for better agricultural products. The oil road was also lauded by the speaker.

A. Odenwelder complimented the ladies for the excellent service at the banquet and lauded the "get together" idea exemplified by the uniting of farmer and town resident at the table for the consideration of things that will work for the good of the state. He predicted that the work started in this direction would go on and grow to the satisfaction and betterment of all in the county. He also urged a coliseum for the handling of conventions, farmers' shows and other big entertainments that the city is now unable to adequately care for.

Hits Street Paving.

E. E. Moore, when called upon, stated that some of his experiences on a recent visit to California where, after hearing the exhibitors boasting the corn raised in that state, squelched his loquacious coast booster by telling him of Iowa corn. Mr. Moore saw some familiarity with road conditions and what he had to say of those within the city and particularly of North Court street was not flattering. His allusion to the city's sign to autoists not to run more than ten miles an hour in the city limits was that such a sign was unnecessary on North Court street as the condition of the road was sufficient warning to the careful driver.

A. H. Nelson complimented the farmers for their interest in Ottumwa and in making this place their market center. He said that Wapello county has the best institute in the state and asked that both city and county unite in making Ottumwa a better market center for the products of the farm. He also made a plea for a suitable place for the holding of the institute and live stock show with a view to making these farm exhibits take the place of the old county fair. Mr. Nelson said that he would rather be in business in Iowa because it is an agricultural state, than in any manufacturing state. Cooperation and pull-together were things advocated by the speaker as the means for building the city and county, saying, "What is good for the county is good for us all."

Roads and crops with a shoulder to shoulder struggle for the supremacy of Wapello county were things talked of by John M. McElroy, who urged the repair of the roads by grading, ridding the highway of the gutters and ditches along the sides and by dragging and rolling the surface.

The heavy auto was referred to as one of the best means of rolling roads and he closed by saying that a hand and heart to heart effort by city and country will accomplish much good for all.

Urges Brotherhood.

Fraternity and the brotherhood of man was urged in the remarks of A. R. Bluhm, organizer for the county grange, who was next called upon. Mr. Bluhm told of the good for the county by having both farmer and business man join in the work for the common good of all. The need of a crop expert for the county was likened to the need of a good administrator for the city. Better transportation facilities and rates and a better understanding of the cost of production and of distribution as a means for a more equitable cost of the products to the consumer were urged. The speaker asked for the sentiment of the meeting for the building of a coliseum or some such structure to accommodate big gatherings, but nothing was done in this matter.

Rev. P. O. Bersell, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church, was called upon for remarks and for some minutes kept the banqueters in good humor by a fund of pleasing stories. He referred to his coming here from Chicago and his impression of the city upon arrival. He said he has found that the spirit of Ottumwa is not visible on the exterior but that it was emphasized in an unmistakable manner in the gathering of the evening. He also stated that he has found that the country begins well within the city limits and urged the union of city and country and closer relations between the two. The farmers were alluded to as prophets from the country with a message for the good of all.

George Haw was called upon one who could tell about the Greater Iowa association and he referred to his visit with the committee that selected the site for the Iowa building at the Panama-Pacific exposition. He dwelt upon the comparative production of Iowa and California. In urging the closer relationship of the city and country for the advancement of the state, the speaker said that he would like to see the country begin at the heart of the city and spread out limitlessly until it included the county and the latter take the broader view for the good of the state, thus giving Iowa the rightful place as the state that does things.

J. B. Sax lauded the plan of a joint gathering of the farmers and merchants and complimented the men from the country for their eloquence and words of wisdom. He urged the occasion be made an annual event and moved the thanks of the Ottumwans for the cooperation and presence of the farmers.

M. L. Truitt testified the appreciation of the farmers for the privilege of cooperating and moving to the city on behalf of the farmers to the business men and ladies for the banquet. A general vote of thanks to the ladies was given by all present rising to their feet, following which the program ended.

ZAPATA FORCES IN MEXICO CITY

The killing of the American is described in official dispatches as having caused the greatest excitement and emotion in the foreign colony.

The Brazilian minister reported that General Salazar, the Zapata commander, has promised to find the guilty troopers and punish them. The official dispatches telling of the killing did not contain great detail, but indicated that there was a dispute over whether McManus or the Zapata soldiers began the shooting. It was added, however, that the American's hat was shot full of holes with evidence that the killing was done at close range.

In Washington the news of the killing was received in official quarters with evidences of deep concern. The Brazilian minister's dispatches arrived just as the cabinet was assembling and Secretary Bryan took them to be laid before the president. Mr. Bryan said that as a searching investigation was under way no steps were likely to be taken until all the facts were before the American government.

A search of state department records seemed to establish that General Salazar, commanding the Zapata troops was not General Ynez Salazar, a notorious bandit chief, charged with the murder of several Americans, among them Thomas Fountain, an American captured as a prisoner of war while serving as a machine gun operator in the Madero army. Salazar was taken a prisoner after the defeat of Huerta's army by Villa at Ojinaga and was for months interned with the other Mexican troops in a prison in New Mexico last December.

Supplementary dispatches from the Brazilian minister said good order prevailed in the capital from the time Oregon and his Carranza troops left until the Zapata forces entered.

Carranza Accountable.

It was pointed out here that President Wilson's note to General Carranza, calling on him in strong terms to alter his attitude toward foreigners in Mexico City, specifically pointed out that the American government intended to hold Carranza and Oregon personally responsible for any injury to life or property of foreigners if they failed to provide adequate protection in the event of their evacuation of the capital.

Alien Dispatches Received.

Official dispatches received in diplomatic quarters from other legations in Mexico City said one British house was looted and one hundred persons were injured in the disorder which prevailed between the evacuation of Oregon and the entry of the Zapata troops.

PLACES HIS HONOR ABOVE BIG SCOOP

ST. LOUIS NEWSPAPER MAN SENDS RIVAL'S STORY OVER TELEGRAPH WIRE.

RECALLED BY DEATH

Interesting Incident of The Old Days is Disclosed in Connection With Recent Passing Of Frank James.

Frank James is dead. Cole Younger is at liberty and the sensational crime drama of the 70's has retired behind the final ringing down of the curtain.

It was 32 years ago last fall since Jess James was shot in the back of the head at St. Joseph, Mo., by Bob Ford, an intimate personal associate to earn $5,000 reward which Governor Crittenden of Missouri had offered for the man, dead or alive. When Bob Ford sold his soul for dollars he unconsciously wiped out the gang which had given Missouri unpleasant notoriety. For Jesse James was the leader in the insurgent move which had set itself against the world writes C. R. Webb in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

But this story has nothing to do with the exploits of the so-called James gang. These things are matters of history, which can be dealt with elsewhere. It has nothing to do with the course of Governor Crittenden, who had determined to wipe out what he considered a stain on the good name of the state. It has simply to do with a manifestation of manhood and true honor probably unparalleled in the history of newspaper work, and which puts to the front a hero who can easily rank with Napoleon's drummer boy, or any of the others who have shown the quality of "dead gameness" in the story of life.

Decides to Surrender.

In the fall of 1882, when Bob Ford perpetrated his unspeakable act at St. Joseph, Frank James was farming in Tennessee. He had decided to quit "the road" forever and live an honest life. He thought he was hidden from the public eye and could pursue his calling indefinitely without molestation. But when the news came to him of the killing of Jesse, he knew that the fates had turned—a new era was on and the pursuit of the law was relentless. So he determined to surrender and take his chances.

Means and ways were now only to be considered. How should he go about it?

Communication must be had with Governor Crittenden—but how? Going over the roll of men he knew in Missouri who were friendly to him, he thought of Major John N. Edwards. Everybody over 30 years old in Missouri remembers John N. Edwards, the gallant confederate soldier, the brilliant writer, author of "Shelby and his Men," editor at different times of the "St. Louis Times," the "Kansas City Times" and the "St. Joseph Gazette," the man who "never failed a friend or an enemy," and undoubtedly the best-loved man in the state.

Surrender is Arranged.

In some way Frank James got into communication with Major Edwards and a plan was concocted by which James should surrender to Governor Crittenden and stand trial. Details of the negotiations are not known—never will be known—for Edwards passed over the great divide long ago and now Frank is gone. But it is almost certain that the generous heart of Governor Crittenden granted that enough blood had been shed and he was willing to make kindly terms with the remaining brother of the bandit gang.

Whether terms were explicitly made or there was only a tacit agreement is not known, but the facts are that Frank James wrote a most eloquent letter to the governor, offering to surrender; that this reached Governor Crittenden, was favorably considered; that details were arranged and meetings of mutual friends were held; that James surrendered, some sort of trial was held, but he was never punished and had led a decent and honest life for over 30 years until claimed by death.

The Newspaper End.

These are the main facts and what the public knows. The unique, one might say remarkable, newspaper end of it remains.

Frank R. O'Neil was then a prominent figure on the St. Louis Republican, now the Republic. In some way he got into the game and aided James and Edwards in arranging the details. Whether he or Edwards wrote the remarkable letter to the governor is not known. Both were asters of English and James was not. Whoever wrote it, it was a historic document, worthy to rank in human interest with the best efforts of the human mind.

When the time was ripe, O'Neil, Edwards and James were together at Independence, Mo., the letter was forwarded and the surrender made. The understanding was that O'Neil should have a "scoop" for his paper of the letter and the whole story was written and filed with the telegraph company.

In the meantime William Spink, commonly known as "Billey" Spink, telegraphed editor of the Globe-Democrat, had gotten "next" that something was going on. He didn't know what it was, but he knew that O'Neil was in it. So he followed him and when Frank started west over Missouri, Spink was close behind. In the evening he dropped into the telegraph office at Independence, Mo., and wanted to file some small item he had picked up for the Globe-Democrat.

Operator Needs Help.

"Great Scott!" said the operator, who was an ordinary workman, used to handling small business, "they are going to get you through? Look at this pile! I've got enough to do me all night."

And he showed Frank O'Neil's big bunch of "copy" which he looked at in dismay.

"Look here, boy," said Spink, "I am an old-time telegrapher. I know this stuff you've got has right of way, but I must get my story to my paper. Let me sit in for you, so we can get through in reasonable time."

The operator was a happy man. Releasing his key, Billy Spink took it up and sent the whole story faithfully to the Republic. And then! Then he had Frank O'Neil's story, and it was the biggest story of the year.

But he never sent it to the Globe-Democrat. He sent his own little story which he had picked up. Then he quit. He told Joseph B. McCullagh, managing editor of the Globe-Democrat, that he was ready to resign.

"I got the story I was after, but, considering the way I got it, I don't think I could in honor use it," he said. But his resignation was not accepted and somewhere, these nights, the moon is shining on the grave of a high souled man, who under outrageous provocation, surrendered his ambition to what he considered his self respect.
