

WOUNDED MEN TO COME HOME

ARMY PLANS TO TAKE CARE OF IOWA TROOPS IN OWN STATE.

Des Moines, Oct. 23.—Iowa soldiers now abroad and those to go later if they have the misfortune to be in the path of a Teutonic bullet or shell and are injured will be sent back to their native state for treatment.

This was the declaration made by Colonel Glennan, of the army medical corps, when he announced that one of the objects of converting the army post at Fort Des Moines into a large general hospital was to provide a haven near "their own people" for Hawkeye fighters who are injured abroad.

The work of converting the army post at the capital into a hospital will entail the expenditure of $123,000. Immediately after the colored officers' school ceases at the post about November 1, a portion of the post will be set aside for the reception of a battalion of the infantrymen from Fort Snelling, for the winter, and the remainder of the big military establishment will be converted into what eventually will be one of the most complete general hospitals ever built by the army medical department.

The hospital will have a capacity of 1,000 beds. The staff will be headed by Lieutenant Colonel E. G. Bingham, who now is engaged in military work at the post. Thirty-five medical officers, ranked from major down, procured from the medical reserve corps, will be the permanent hospital staff, and fifteen additional medical corps men will be stationed at the hospital all the time undergoing special instruction in order to be equipped for assignment elsewhere. An enlisted personnel of between 200 and 300 hospital attendants will be detailed at the hospital.

The medical staff will include experts in surgery, skilled laboratory physicians and specialists in nervous diseases, eye, ear, nose and throat, and all branches of surgery.

ENLARGE CAMP HOSPITAL. Colonel Glennan, who is chief of the division of special hospitals, also announced that 500 bed hospitals at Camp Dodge was to be increased to a 1,400 bed plant by the addition of sixteen more wards. The increasing of this hospital will also call for an increased staff of medical officers and enlisted personnel.

REFUSES COMMITTEE BUT HE WAKES UP TO FIND HIS STORE "DECORATED."

Council Bluffs, Oct. 23.—"I did not buy any of the first bonds. I am not going to buy any of this issue. This country does not owe me anything. I do not owe this country anything. I do not want you to come in here again."

Two members of the Liberty Bond sale committee quote F. H. Morgan, prominent druggist at Eighth street and Broadway as making the above assertion.

Supposedly as a result of the rumors afloat, as to Mr. Morgan's attitude, the front of Mr. Morgan's store and sidewalk on both sides of the corner were found to be literally daubed with yellow paint. There was hardly a spot on the sidewalk that wasn't smeared yellow. The paint had run down off the walls into the street. The store front, too, was streaked with yellow paint.

O. P. Peterson and Elmer Lane of the police department discovered that someone had visited the corner and made free use of yellow paint. They reported it to headquarters and also notified Mr. Morgan.

The officers made out the following legends which the visitors had painted on the front: "Slacker." "This man won't buy a bond." "If you don't like this country, why don't you get out of it?" Other inscriptions also were daubed in yellow but they could not be plainly discerned.

Evening Story

SOMEbody'S PAL. By Isabel Frost. (Copyright, 1917, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It was not that Three Arrows was naturally suspicious, but nature had placed it so exclusively, all by itself on the shoulders of Kaska Mountain, that it regarded strangers in the light of interlopers. Therefore, it kept one eye on Evelyn May from the moment she stepped from the river steambat.

Another thing that had added to her immediate popularity was her reticence. She absolutely refused from the beginning to take Three Arrows into her confidence. Whether she had come north drawn by the lure of gold, or merely from the love of adventure, no one could tell.

Slim Rogers sized her up at long distance from his point of vantage on the lean-to porch of Rafferty's shack. In Three Arrows he was accounted not only local sheriff, but also the final court of appeals of the standing of strangers. Slim had been rather idle of late. A pall of monotonous morality had fallen over the land immediately under his lawful guardianship. There had been no killings since Christmas, when Lone Duck, from Nome, had jubilantly picked off two harmless salmon trimmers from a tribe down river.

The Golden Eagle had been doing a languid business, supported only by local patronage, and the citizens of Three Arrows were beginning to take a civic pride in preserving the peace. Therefore, Slim's occupation was gone, and he had the more leisure to observe Evelyn May.

It was this observation which annoyed Evelyn. She felt herself under suspicion and did not hesitate to show Slim that she was aware of his official scrutiny. She had taken up quarters in the only building place for transient travelers. Mrs. Rafferty's lodging house and cafe. Mrs. Rafferty had ruled public opinion in Three Arrows for many moons, but even she was placed aloof from Evelyn's confidence. She would stand in the door of her kitchen after lightsomely turning fried eggs and bacon for her star boarder's breakfast, and try her best to glean some personal information.

"It's a long way for a girl of your age to be traveling alone," she said one morning. "I love to travel," said Evelyn, pleasantly. "Is it very far up Kaska?" She looked from the window at her right hand at the great peak that seemed to touch the morning clouds.

"There's nothing to see when you get up there," said Mrs. Rafferty. "You want to go up or down the river if you're looking for sights. There ain't nothing up there but Indians. It gets pretty hard past timberline. You wouldn't find pickings for a woodchuck."

Evelyn glanced at her with her first show of interest. "Do you know woodchucks?" she asked, eagerly. "It's the first time I've heard the word since I came west, and I guess there ain't any out here."

"We're here with you from Connecticut," responded Mrs. Rafferty. "Come from down east, do you?" Evelyn retreated into her shell at once, and only nodded. From the corner of her eye she could see Slim's tall figure shadowing the doorway.

"Better put me up a lunch, Mollie," he said to Mrs. Rafferty, trying to ignore the presence at the table by the window. "We're going up Kaska again today. Benson blew in last night and they think they've struck a new seam."

Mrs. Rafferty bustled around, carving deep slices of boiled ham as she talked. "Well, I hope to the lord, Slim Rogers, that you never come within a mile of shooting at him. If ever a man deserved what he got, it was Lone Duck. He got so he thought he owned the whole river front. It wasn't just those two fellows from the salmon fishery. He'd about eight more to his credit, Tom says, and then some. Did you hear what the fight was about? I mean the one with the kid."

Slim helped himself to a large cup of black coffee, knowing full well that he had an audience. "They fought over an Indian girl. Lone Duck came into camp drunk and started to beat her up. Billie had been prospecting around there for several weeks, and I rather think the Duck was afraid he had heard too much from Neonta. Anyway, he tried to silence him forever, and the kid got in a first shot. Law's law, Mollie, you know. Best citizen's women folk would kick wouldn't you? If you let a curly-haired, blue-eyed youngster get away with murder! There's mine of us going after him today and Benson says he can lay his finger right on him."

No one will ever know just what took place in Evelyn's mind at that moment. She rose from her table and went over to Mrs. Rafferty's side. "Can't I help you cut these sandwiches? I'd love to help," she said. Whereupon it naturally befell that Mrs. Rafferty introduced Slim.

Never in the sheriff's twenty-eight years of life had he encountered such a subtle spell as that which lay in the girl's personality. Didn't he think the view from Kaska was wonderful? He sure did. And when she begged for the privilege of riding up with him and the rest of the posse Slim was not the man to say her nay. They were going eight miles around the mountain. He told her she could ride until he asked her to turn back, and she agreed to obey orders. There is a witchery about Alaska scenery in June, and suddenly, without warning, the whole land throws aside its frozen cloak and blooms in splendor.

Slim had only known her for four weeks, but before they had reached the timberline he had forgotten the vital importance of catching the kid, and was absolutely at the mercy of Evelyn May. It didn't worry him much. Benson had gone ahead with the other men. He could afford to loiter. When her pony stumbled and came up with a sprung knee, Slim welcomed the delay as a gift from the gods. He stood beside her as she sat on a great boulder, overlooking the country for miles, and even with her

RABBI WISE BOOSTS BONDS

JEWISH ORATOR SAYS MAN WHO DOES NOT BUY BONDS KAISER TO WIN.

Davenport, Oct. 23.—That the man who does not invest in a liberty bond is one who secretly wants Germany to win this war, was the declaration of Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, the eminent Jewish orator, who spoke to an immense crowd of people at the First Presbyterian church Sunday evening.

Rabbi Wise maintained that war offered the one chance in all history for the people to break down militarism, that it was an inevitable war, and that it was inevitable from the start that our country should get into the war. We could do nothing else and retain our self-respect. We could only have stayed out and drawn to our shores all the wealth of the world, but we would have merited the disdain of the least worthy of peoples.

Talk about peace is all right, said the rabbi, in speaking of the People's council, but it is not spoken in the right place. It should be discussed in Berlin and Vienna, not in this country, until the United States has gone right on to the end. No nation is going to remain free to do the things that Germany has done, he declared.

teasing, provocative blue eyes mocking his earnestness, he told her what life might be like if she remained in the Yukon country as the sheriff's bride.

"You'd make a wonderful pal for somebody, Mr. Rogers, but how about being a husband? We're almost strangers. You men of the north do your wooing rapidly."

"We have to," said Slim, shortly. "Go they get away. It's a fearful mate here. A woman's got to have a doggone good reason or she'd never stay in it at all."

He stopped short. There came the sound of rapid firing above them, then the crashing, sliding grind of hoofs, as a horse and rider dashed recklessly down the mountain trail. Slim whipped his pistol out and aimed as the boy shot past them, but Evelyn's hands sprang him, and she buried her teeth in the wrist that held the revolver. It was over in an instant. The kid was out sight, already, bound for safety, and Slim stood over a sobbing girl, looking at the blood trickling from his wrist. Somehow his arm found its way around her shoulder, while she told him of her mission to Three Arrows.

The kid was just her brother, nineteen years old, and the baby of the family back east. They had not heard from him in months, and she had come out alone to learn the reason.

"I'm sorry, Slim," she said, "that I hurt you. I didn't mean to. I suppose it's wrong to want him to get away when he broke the law."

Slim smiled peacefully; the head of Evelyn May leaned willingly against his shoulder. "I guess he'd better put up a plea of self-defense and come back home," he said, "so as to be in time for the wedding."
