The Bemidji string orchestra gives a dancing party at the city hall tonight. About 100 invitations have been issued and a large attendance is expected.

A. H. Davis, who has a homestead near Alida, and all sorts of faith in the future of northern Minnesota, is renewing his acquaintances in Bemidji today.

Peter Carlson, one of the prominent residents of Kelliher, is in the city today. Mr. Carlson has been transacting business before the United States land office at Cass Lake.

A. H. Harris, recorder of the village of Kelliher, is in the city on business today. Mr. Harris says the snow fall at Kelliher was not nearly as heavy last night as it was in this city.

State Timber Inspector Casler was over in Clearwater yesterday. Mr. Casler says there has been less trespass reported from Clearwater county this winter than from any county in this section of the state.

Photographer Reed was up the lake shore this afternoon and took some views of the boulevard residences and the trees while the snow was on them. Mr. Reed expects a handsome picture and they will no doubt be much in demand.

Chairman Sibley of the board of county commissioners has been watching the development of a flock of quail near his home with a very great deal of interest. So far as is known they are the only covey in this section. Last fall there were five of the birds, but two were killed by hunters. At the present time there are only two and they have had a very hard winter owing to the deep snow. Quail shooting is prime sport and as soon as the country becomes older there will no doubt be good quail shooting in this section.

This the Motto of Poor Lo During the Sugar Making Season.

INDIANS BEGIN THEIR ANNUAL SUGAR HARVEST

Expect Large Returns This Year 'As Season Is Unusually Favorable.

With the beginning of the month of April the snow is rapidly disappearing until there is but an occasional streak of the "beautiful" visible to the naked eye. In the woods. The first of April is the day which marks the beginning of the "sugar season" among the Chippewa Indians, and the reds have taken their wives and families and hied them to "the bush" to gather the annual maple sugar. The head of the family usually keeps guard over the camp which is established in the maple belt, and looks after the boiling of the sap. Unlike his pale face brother, he does not enter strenuously into the hard work of the gathering of the sap, but sits beside the big iron kettle in which the sap boils and with a pipe grasped firmly between his teeth stirs the sap and builds air castles, while his better half and his offspring attend to the real labor. The Indian method of obtaining the sap is very simple. A hole is chopped in the tree—a hard maple—about two feet from the ground, slanting from the top to the bottom, and at the bottom of two of these grooves which join together, there is driven a hard wood chip, which acts as a conductor of the sap into birch bark receptacles, which are made for holding the sweet stuff. The sap is then put into large iron kettles, over a hot fire where it boils. A large amount of boiling is necessary to secure the sugar as it takes about a barrel of sap to make a gallon of syrup, which will make about three pounds of sugar, and this is about the average amount of sap taken from a tree of mature proportions. Pieces of fat pork are boiled with the sap—on top—and they keep the sap from boiling over the kettles. The quality of sugar made by the Indians is absolutely pure, and in very good condition when offered for sale. This industry constitutes one of the chief sources of income for the Indian, and it is expected that there will be a large crop of the sap this season, which will last about three weeks, during which time the reds desert their homes and live altogether in the bush.
