CITY DENIES ALLEGATION

Minneapolis Journal Says Commercial Club Turned Bernard and Hays Down.

The Minneapolis Journal in an article yesterday denies that the Minneapolis commercial club had anything to do with the drainage lobby at Washington and says:

"Northern Minnesota papers are attacking the officers of the state drainage league, A. G. Bernard, president, and H. G. Hays, secretary, for spending their time in Washington rather than at home. Furthermore they hold twin city interests responsible."

"Whatever question of propriety there may be in the actions of the officers of the league, they received no assistance from the commercial club," said Wallace G. Nye of the public affairs committee today. "A request for funds made to the club through our committee was refused. It is true, as the papers of the northern part of the state say that the business interests of the twin cities are interested in the drainage of the vast areas of northern lands that are now useless. We did not, however, approve the purpose of the fund. So far as I know, Minneapolis interests refused to respond very freely to the requests, and are in no way interested in the Washington lobby."

The attack on the city interests that are said to be keeping the officers of the league in Washington are coming thick and fast. It is maintained that the officials should remain at home to prosecute the work, and that the twin city interests are overstepping themselves in assisting. The fact that the prominent business associations of the twin cities turned down the requests releases them from any responsibility for the absence of the president and secretary but does not explain the lobby fund."
