Edward Barnes of Clearbrook has returned from Canada recently. He reported plenty of snow and cold weather, and all the English coin locked up in the vaults of the banks of that country, except that which some of the boys from here are foolish enough to go up there and throw away, which in turn is locked up in the coffers of the Englishman, and our boys have to beat it the best way they know how, and all knows what means in a new country with no credit, no friends, and worst of all no money. Imagine yourself in such a position, and you would wish to God that you had stuck to your piece of land across the divide, where friends were plenty and help for the asking.

Finest English Prose.

George Saintsbury in his "History of English Prose Rhythm," declared that "one of the highest points of English prose is probably reached in the Authorized Version of the sixtieth chapter of Isaiah," beginning, "Arise, shine." No other translation in any language, he says, can vie with English in the splendor of this passage as it appears in the 1611 version. "So long as a single copy of the version of 1611 survives," he avers, "so long will there be accessible the best words of the best time of English."

CRUST BEST PART OF LOAF

Richer Than the Crumb, and Stimulates Greatly the Flow of Digestive Juices.

Shall we eat the crumb of the bread or the crust? Ever since we were very young we have been told that if we ate the crusts our hair would surely be curly, but now there seems to be a scientific reason why we should eat them in preference to the inside of the bread. Crusts are really the most valuable part of the loaf.

According to Prof. Du Bois of Paris the crust contains less moisture than the crumb and so is richer in solid constituents. The crust has also a more pronounced bread flavor, being more tasty, and so stimulates better the flow of digestive juices.

Then, too, the crust is better digested in the mouth because of the difficulties in masticating it. If new bread were as thoroughly masticated as stale or dry bread is bound to be, there would be no reason why it would be any less digestible.

Man and Monkey.

The question of the simian ancestry of man has long been the subject of jest. From the zoological point of view it has been a matter of more serious concern as far as the position of men in any scheme of classification is involved. With the advent of modern methods of study applied to blood and the problems of immunity, data of a new sort have been furnished to bear on the real relationship of man to some of his animal competitors. To this evidence of blood relationship have now been added fresh facts derived from the study of nutrition. The long known contrast between man and the animals is thus made less striking by the discovery of those intermediate species exhibiting human characteristics in more than one way. The gap has been bridged by the studies on the anthropoid apes which have now furnished to science the reputable evidence for that relationship which the behavior of apes in vaudeville and elsewhere has strongly suggested.—From the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Puzzling English Pronunciation.

The puzzling place name (writes a correspondent) may be found all over England. I first realized that things are not what they seem when, one morning at Preston, in Lancashire, I inquired my way to Darwen, and was met by a blank stare. (It's "Darren," apparently.) But the greatest stumbling-block in the London district is probably the Peppys-road, at New Cross. A few years ago I lived hard by, and, when forced to allude to the road, I ventured a little uncertainly—on "Peeps." Others—I think they were the majority—had it as "Pepp." Then "Peppis" had its votaries. While the variant that appeared to commend itself to the local tradesman was "Peppis."—London Chronicle.

Stringing Pearls.

Only the finest silk is used for stringing the finest pearls. Great beads, round and shiny, unmistakably artificial, and with no more real luster than white marbles, with the exception of what are called Roman pearls, manufactured many years ago, may be allowed to hang together on catgut, but pearls must be threaded, pearl kissing pearl, on silken strands, worthy of their shape and "skin."
