Proclaims Peace Day.

A state-wide appeal for peace has been issued by Governor Eberhart, urging Minnesota to observe Peace Sunday, Oct. 4, the day designated by President Wilson for that purpose. Co-operating with J. C. Simpson, secretary of the state fair, the governor announced that communications urging 52 fair associations in the United States and Canada to aid in the peace movement, already have been sent out. "I beg of all Godfearing people of Minnesota," says greatly increased the necessity for the proclamation, "in their churches, bridges, so that except for the comin fraternal organizations, and in paratively small stone bridges of an their homes, to observe Sunday, Oct. 4, as Peace Day, so that the voices of the people of Minnesota must ascent in a single prayer to the Supreme Being that there be brought about 'Peace on earth and good will tures have been erected which meet toward men.' '

BRIDGES AND APPROACHES

Modern Structures Neither Durable Nor Artistic.

ANCIENTS BUILDED WELL.

To Achieve the Proper Result the Engineer Should Co-operate With the

By FRANK KOESTER.

[Consulting civil engineer Hudson Terminal building, New York, and author of "Modern City Planning and Mainte-

Of all the structures erected the bridge is possessed of the greatest individuality, unity and feeling. It is at famous salts is made from the acid once an inspiration and a utility, and it marks as no other structure does the it marks as no other structure does the progress of man from barbarism to civilization. It is one of his greatest so it no longer irritates, thus enditriumphs over nature's obstacles, for bladder weakness. it is not only an evidence of his ability to merely construct-that is, to place one stone upon another-but of his ability to think and so to utilize the forces of nature as to cause one stone to stand upon another with nothing directly beneath.

A building can never produce the sense of unity of the bridge and thus can never inspire as the bridge does, because, while portions of a building may be eliminated and still leave it a building, the elimination of a portion of a bridge means its destruction for the purposes for which it is erected.

The bridge occupies thus a unique position among the structures of man, approached only by the dam, to which, however, it is far superior, since the dam'always lacks in the sense of self evident security which the bridge imparts. Not only is the bridge unique in its position among structures, but it is the largest single structure erected by man and the most costly. It is also highly important in point of numbers and in the investment involved. There are, for example, some 80,000 metal bridges in the United States, or one for every three miles of railroad, and they aggregate 1,400 miles in length representing an investment of $800, 000,000, or several times the cost of the Panama canal. The subject of bridges is therefore one which demands the most careful attention of all who have to deal with it. It is not a subject which should be reserved to the officials and engineers in charge. but is one in which the public should take an active and decisive interest When a bridge of any consequence is to be erected the designs should be open to public inspection and all ob jections and suggestions should be dealt with in advance. The pleasing psychological and aes thetic effect of bridges has been rec ognized since the earliest times, but great bridges are a result of modern invention, being dependent upon the cheap production of steel for their evolution, since stone bridges have never been constructed in anything like the great spans of the modern steel bridges. The railroad, too, bag cient and medieval times, the principles of which were early mastered bridge building is a modern science. The success achieved has been little less than stupendous in a material and engineering sense, for enormous structhe demands of traffic and the various conditions which were presented.

In two respects, however, the modern bridge is for the most part a great fail ure. It is neither artistic nor will it have the long life of the ancient built bridges which are in use today but no modern metal bridge, even with the most careful attention, can be expected to last even a small part of such a period. Even if protected from the action of the elements, the steel which might then be reasonably expected to last indefinitely will be subject to crystallization from the effects of vibration Wealthy Americans are arriving Thus all our steel bridges are temporary structures. This, however, will in the most cases prove a matter of congratulation, as when they pass away they will be undoubtedly replaced by more artistic structures. Only our stone bridges, however, may be expect ed to endure into the eras of new races such are to succeed us.
