HUGHES IS LEADER OF BIG REFORM MOVE IN
NEW YORK STATE

dinarily successful until 1891, when, his health threatened by overwork, he became professor of law at Cornell.
In 1893 he went back to practicing and soon became one of the universally recognized authorities in New York on corporation law. His first public service was in 1905 as special counsel for the legislative commission investigating New York City's gas and electric companies.

A Special Counsel.
Hughes' work in this investigation was of so brilliant a character that when there was a general demand that same year for a legislative investigation of the Equitable Insurance scandal, State Senator W. W.
Armstrong, appointed head of such a probing body, called on Hughes, then on a vacation in Switzerland, to return and act as a special counsel.
The disclosures of that investigation are historic. They were responsible in the main for Hughes later being elected twice as governor of New York. In the middle of the investigation he flatly refused a mayoralty nomination.

From the outset of his career as governor Hughes was in trouble with Republican party leaders. He developed an aloofness from them, and complete independence of thought and action that finally culminated in an open break between him and William Barnes, Jr.
New Yorkers still remember a speech by Hughes before the Albany newspaper correspondents as one of the most artistic, vitriolic "dressing downs" that was ever spoken. It simply took the hide off Barnes. The up-state "boss" responded by denouncing Hughes as a party ingrate and traitor to the state convention.

Nevertheless, Hughes was renominated and re-elected.
The Hughes fight against the race track interests was probably the most spectacular of all his moves as governor. Behind it lay a sentimental interest. While practicing law Hughes was thrown in contact with a stenographer whose father had been imprisoned for embezzlement of money with which he "played the races."

Repeals Bet Law.
When Hughes became governor his first message suggested repeal of the law legalizing betting at race tracks.
A committee friendly to the race interests laughed and tabled the bill.
But Hughes "got his dander up." He stumped the state for his plan. Killed at a regular session of the legislature, it was later revived at a special session and finally forced through by the vote of a sick senator who was carried into the chamber on a stretcher.

Hughes was first mentioned for the presidency eight years ago. He steadfastly refused to be even a receptive candidate. Four years ago he likewise declined to take any interest in politics. Two years ago his name first began to be mentioned as a Republican nominee against Wilson.

Man of Silence.
For more than a year Republican leaders have tried to make him "come out in the open" on whether he would accept the Republican nomination.
They didn't succeed.

Hughes retired behind his fastgraying and always famous whiskers.
Hughes has been consistent in his reforms. He started New York with the thoroughness with which he probed the life insurance scandals and when governor made bitter enemies of the "regular" crowd by doing just as he pleased on appointments, by instituting direct primaries, insurance reform and anti-rack track legislation.

Because of his reform record and his progressivism of thought, Hughes was mentioned as an "amalgamation" candidate, who would unite both the Republicans and Progresssives. He isn't popular with the "old guard" because of his habits of almost "insolent independence," as one leader has expressed it, but all Republicans admit his strength with the voters.

By a generator connected with its crank mechanism a new French motion picture projector is furnished with its own electric light.
