

JUDGE STANTON DENIES MOTION OF THE UNION

That these citizens desiring to go to and from their place of employment were entitled to protection at the hands of municipal authority from this unlawful assemblage and relief from their conduct. That while many people had been misled and mis-advised as to the right of picketing, Mr. McDonald urged that if the picketing was done with intent to injure and with full disregard of the rights of employees or employers, it was a violation of law.

Many cases were cited in support of the proposition "A moral and natural intimidation that works on the minds or would move an ordinary man against his will is sufficient to constitute a violation of law. Cases were also cited in the support that the defendant Union and all its members are liable for acts of pickets. A case recently decided in the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan holds that equity may prohibit the picketing of the premises of an employer against whom a strike has been declared and those who picket under the impression that the court has no jurisdiction over such are guilty of contempt.

The Supreme Court of Illinois has held "It is idle to talk of picketing for lawful purposes. Men do not form picket lines for the purpose of conversational and lawful persuasion. . . . In imagination and theory a peaceable picket line may be possible, but in fact a picket line is never peaceable. It is always a formation of actual warfare and quite inconsistent with everything not related to force and violence. Its used is a form of unlawful coercion."

Mr. McGrath contended that they had the right to picket the premises of the Crookston Lumber company, provided they did so in a peaceful and lawful manner.

The defendants motion to vacate the restraining order was denied as was also the motion to dismiss the restraining order as to the Timberworkers Local Union No. 135. The court decided to modify the form of order heretofore issued restraining the defendants and made an order: "restraining the defendants from by means of any unlawful act, interfering with the plaintiffs in the operation of its saw mill or of the conduct of its business; or interfering with or molesting employees of said plaintiff by acts or words of intimidation or coercion or by means of threats; or by any other than peaceful and lawful means endeavoring to induce the employees of the plaintiff (Crookston Lumber company) to abstain from working for the plaintiff."

The hearing on the motion for a temporary injunction was continued until the 6th day of July, 1920, and this restraining order as modified remains in force and effect.

Judge Stanton, in language that could not be misunderstood, announced that so far as the court was concerned nothing would be permitted to be done that was unlawful or illegal. That he had in mind the interests of the strikers as well as the interests of men now employed by the Crookston Lumber company.

HOW TO "BREAK UP" BROODY HENS

The time has come, says N. E. Chapman, poultry specialist with the extension division of the Minnesota college of agriculture, when poultrymen raising the larger breeds—the so-called Rocks and Reds—will have more broody hens than they can use for hatching purposes. All such should be "broken up" as soon as possible that they may be returned to the laying contingent of the flock and do their part in maintaining at least a 50 per cent production. Mr. Chapman says the best method of interfering with a broody hen is to have a well ventilated coop or box with slatted or wire bottom so that the air will circulate freely and thus help to reduce the broody fever. Hens thus incarcerated should be well fed in troughs kept just outside of the coop and also should be given skim milk or buttermilk. Good feed is essential at this time that the egg producing organs may maintain their force and vigor. The coop may be kept in the poultry house or outside it well protected. From three to seven days confinement should suffice to effect a cure.

A Handicap Race.

The Sire—You loaf too much. If you hustle prosperity will be sure to follow.

The Son—But I don't want prosperity trailin' after me all the time. I'm givin' it a chance to catch up.

THE TOLLER. She—Does a farmer have to work hard? He—Yes. But not as hard as the average person who has to buy what we farmers raise.
