Patience.

The need for heroism in our daily lives may seem to be small, but surely calls for patience are numerous enough, patience with slow-moving circumstances, with the brother who does not see truth as we see it, with the unreasonable people who must be managed, if they are to go forward at all. Last, most important of all, we need patience with our blundering, easily discouraged selves. After all, it may be that from a greater height and clearer vision than ours, patience itself may show as a heroic virtue.
