There's a Reason

We quite agree with the small boy. He walked through the cemetery and read all the inscriptions on the tombstones and then wanted to know where all the wicked people were buried.

May I hold your palm Olive?" he asked earnestly.

"Not on your life Buoy," she replied haughtily.

An amateur inventor wants to know if there is any money in a perpetual motion machine. We referred his question to a local storekeeper, who declared that he has a machine in his store which would bring him in a million dollars if he could keep it in perpetual motion.

—His Cash Register—

We Agree With Him

Once upon a time there was a man who went to his boss and told him that he was getting too much money for the work he was doing. But then nearly all fairy stories begin that way.

and Emil Lahtinen were dismissed this afternoon.

John Bell and Mrs. Rhoda Judkins, against whom liquor sale charges were preferred, asked through their attorney, P. J. Russell, that they be allowed to appear at 2 o'clock this afternoon, at which time they will either be examined or waive examination.

Those who spent the night at the county jail as the guests of Sheriff Andrew Johnson were Maude Gilbert (colored), Corinne Jones (colored), Ethel Wilson (colored) and E. L. Gilbert, all hailing from the O. K. restaurant on Beltrami avenue, near the Union depot.

Ruby Weston (Mexican), and Frank Sterling, from their abode in the town of Northern, about a mile north of the city limits, and Rhoda Judkins, who held forth at Irvine avenue and Twenty-sixth street, were escorted to the sheriff's home by Andrew Johnson and Deputies Shea and Cahill.

Frank North, proprietor of the Enterprise Cafe, and his assistant, Vernon Dunbar; John Slow, who once served an eight months' sentence and who runs a place on Minnesota avenue, and Emil Latinen and Faltio Bertram conclude the list of those who whiled the hours away at the county jail Tuesday night.

The charges include running a house of ill-fame and being inmates, selling booze and home-brew from the hip and otherwise.

The third delegate, Dr. F. Beelaerts van Blokland, is an authority on the Far East. As minister of the Dutch government in Peking, he was able to study at first hand, not only the problems of the Pacific, but various problems in which China particularly is involved.

GRAIN AND HAY SHOW WILL OPEN SATURDAY

hibit. Premiums are offered for single and ten-ear samples each of white and yellow corn; for exhibits of wheat, oats, barley, rye, soybeans, cowpeas, and field peas, and for samples of seed and hay, including red clover and sweet clover, alfalfa and timothy. One of the new features of this year is a Junior Corn Contest participated in by several hundred boys.

At the entrance of the Grain and Hay Show, a giant ear of corn will stand sentinel. It is thirty feet high. Sixty bushels of corn were required to build the freak. It is known as the "Dream of the Corn Farmer."

There will be miniature farms, complete in every detail. The exhibit of the United States Department of Agriculture, which covered 3,000 square feet last year, will be even larger this year. Luther Burbank and other wizards of the soil will be represented by exhibits. One of these shows the evolution of corn from Indian grass. Burbank accomplished in a few years the same result which took the Indians centuries to attain. Canada's entry list and delegation of field experts will be 50 per cent larger than last year.

New York Letter

by Lucy Jeanne Price

New York, Nov. 22.—Can you imagine anything more intriguingly fitting than that the first fortune in Wall street should have been made by an alchemist—except that an alchemist should have selected Wall street for the site of his gold-transformation factory? So it was. It was Jan Mar Lichtenstein, a native of Pomerania, who brought here in 1783 his dream that the old alchemists were right and that gold could be made from dross. He purchased a little house on Wall street, erected a triple-furnaced chimney and went to work. He was the original Wall street lamb, I suppose, but in spite of that he made enough money to retire on, because of just owning and sticking to his little house and furnace there, until the city went mad, according to him, and grew up around him so that some absurd person paid him $33,000 for his property!

The American Academy of Arts and Letters is growing as it deserves to grow. The other day Marshall Foch laid the cornerstone of its new building out on 155th street between Riverside and Broadway. Diplomats and hundreds of men and women prominent in the public eye of the country attended the ceremonies. Arts and letters are acquiring a more important place in the American mind with every year that passes.

Once in awhile, some one manages to write a play whose locale, politics and prejudices are totally foreign to our own and yet make it interesting and amusing to us and without, in fact, losing any of its values through its transportation. Arnold Bennett has done that in "The Title." It is an English play, written by an Englishman, attacking what he considers to be a growing and objectionable English policy—the giving of titles more or less indiscriminately. And the American public is going to the Belmont theater where it is being produced, to laugh and sympathize and appreciate just as though it were a session of our congress which was being satirized. Maybe this is partly due to Arnold Bennett's cleverness and partly to the fact that social aspirations of the same sort existed in this country, too, even if there is no such definite thing as a "My Lady" to strive for.

The gala event of New York's whole year—the National Horse Show—is even more gala this year than last season. For the first time in its 36 years of recurring it has departed from Madison Square Garden and is held in Squadron A's Armory, which has been transformed into a real replica of Mount Vernon and the surrounding estate. A hedge of real green encircles the entire building and the school house in the garden where the children of the Custis family attended is erected along the eastern wall. Reginald C. Vanderbilt is, as usual, the most enthusiastic, prominent, and constant attendant.

Times Square, when the air is moist and heavy and the smog weighs it down, experiences a most remarkable sensation these days. "Angel voices" is what the office denizens and the astonished passersby call it. Mysterious music, unheralded and from an invisible source, and of marvelous beauty floats down through the atmosphere. You whirl around in front of the taxis and protesting traffic cops to discover what it is. No use. You can't solve it. It seems to be wafted down from the clouds, and is enough to arouse the superstitious sense of almost any one. Then some one who has tracked it to its lair will tell you. It is the chorus of the Metropolitan opera house, practising in the big building at Broadway and Fortieth street. The murky atmosphere does the rest.

Two noteworthy visitors arrived in New York almost simultaneously the other day to spend some time with us. One is Marchioness of Crewe, whose father is Lord Rosebery, and the other is Juan Belmonte, foremost matador of ancient Castile. His wife will remain in the city during her husband's tour of Mexico because she doesn't like to see him in action.

The only living actress who ever played with Edwin Forrest, glowing star of more than a half century ago, is Blanche Chapman, who is still on the stage and is playing here this season. "Those were the days when we worked," she said the other day. "Just imagine an actress of today playing Ophelia in Hamlet, Mimi in Rip Van Winkle, Josephine in Pinocchio, and some others all in one month."

LOCAL MEMBERS OF G. A. R. AND LADIES GUESTS AT THEATER

All members of the local G. A. R. post and the Ladies' Auxiliary will be the guests of the Harding-Whaley company at the Grand theater tomorrow in honor of Thomas McNally, James Kubicek, Lute J. Smith and George Wolf, the four old patriots, all members of the G. A. R. who appear at that theater in the vaudeville act, "The Follies of '61."

After the matinee, an opportunity will be afforded the veterans to become acquainted with the local G. A. R. members and the G. A. R. Circle. It is expected that practically all of the local members will attend the show.

ENGLISH PRINCESS MARY ENGAGED TO COMMONER

London, Nov. 23.—All England today hailed Princess Mary and her commoner fiancée, Viscount Lascelles. The engagement was announced last night in a statement issued at Buckingham Palace.

The fact is that viscount is a mere courtesy of the king and that the fiancée is just a commoner.

"I am a very happy and lucky man," Viscount Lascelles told his friends, who showered congratulations upon him. The announcement of the betrothal threw London into pleasant excitement. The Viscount is 39, while Mary is 24.

Bismarck, N. D., Nov. 23.—Excitement prevailed here on the eve of the administration change.

Rumors that the industrial commission had disposed of the state bonds at par value were confirmed by an announcement from Attorney General Lemke about 9 o'clock in the evening, that a new contract had been made with the Spitzer-Rorick company at which over $12,000,000 worth of real estate, mill and elevator and bank bonds had been disposed of. This, according to Mr. Lemke, brings the total sale of bonds to approximately $15,000,000.

Bismarck, N. D., Nov. 23.—Newly elected state officials were to be inaugurated late today. They were to take office as a result of the recall election October 28, in which non-partisan office holders were replaced by independents.

It is the first time in American history that the governor of any state has been recalled by popular vote.

Governor Lynn J. Frazier, now serving his third term under the non-partisan regime, was to yield his office to R. A. Nestos, elected after one of the bitterest political fights in North Dakota history.

Attorney General William Lemke was to yield to Sveinbjorn Johnson, and Commissioner of Agriculture and Labor John N. Hagen was to yield to William Kitchin.

Inaugural ceremonies were scheduled for 3 o'clock p. m., following the certification of the vote by the state canvassing board.
