A Good Word for Kilts.

The Tailor and Cutter observes with its usual insight into human nature: "No one has yet suggested the utility of kilts. They never bag at the knees, nor do they ever require patching at that part, and their hygienic properties are proverbial."—London Globe.

Handy Foot Warmers.

Boxes filled with sodium acetate are used in French railway cars as heat producers to keep passengers' feet warm. The salt is put in boxes in the solid state and liquified by placing the boxes in hot water. During the five or six hours it takes to solidify the salt continues to give out heat.

Marvelous Vitality of Eel.

Some eels are hard to kill. A fisherman of Port Isaac, Cornwall, England, recently cut up a large conger eel he had caught for bait for his lobster pots, and 20 minutes afterward picked up the head to throw it into the sea. The jaws of the eel's head opened and the fisherman's forefinger was seized between the sharp teeth. The finger was badly damaged.

Outside a Country Cemetery.

Notice.—The only persons buried in this cemetery are those living in the parish.—Sourire.

BOTH WINE AND SONG.

The choirmaster of St. Thomas church, Boston, tells the following: An old country clergyman was the rector of a poor country parish where the good things of life were scarce. After the morning service one Sunday he was invited to dinner by one of his parishioners, and after the dinner was eaten the host produced some old port wine, with which he plied his guest. Not being used to much stimulant the old gentleman took more than was good for him, and when it came time for evening prayer he was a little tipsy.

As he struggled through the service the wine began to affect him more and more, until as he got up to announce the final hymn he was "all in." Struggling to his feet he mumbled: "Brethren, let us sing hymn 8866." The clerk of the parish from his seat in front of the pulpit whispered: "Your reverence, there are not so many hymns in the book." With a final effort the dominie said: "Then sing all there are," and collapsed.

ANTI-TRUST UNDERTAKER.

A cut-rate funeral director of Hudson county, N. J., stands up to be counted as against the Undertakers' Trust. In a mourning bordered proclamation he makes the following announcement: "The Undertakers' Trust is still trying to whip me into line, but the man or body of men that can scare me into a scheme to charge exorbitant prices has yet to be born. What right has anybody to charge 400 or 500 per cent. for funeral supplies, especially when such imposition strikes the poor workingman who toils for a couple of dollars per day? I positively give as good if not a better casket at $25 as that for which the trust undertaker gets $65. My regular price is $35, but I am going to put an end to this system of skyscraping bills if I die in the attempt. And, remember, we are making money at that; we are not in business for love."

RECKLESSNESS OF PARTRIDGES.

An extraordinary partridge story comes from Corington, Huntingdon, England. A lady was reading in her sitting room when, to her consternation, she discovered that they broke two panes of glass but were secured before doing further damage. It is supposed they were being pursued by a hawk, no guns being out at the time. Partridges look backward in flight and are frequently injured or killed by telegraph wires. Some time ago a partridge dashed into the thick lookout glass of an engine on the Great Eastern railway near Ely and actually smashed it, while it is no unusual thing in Cambridgeshire and Norfolk for them to fly into railway carriages.

FOILED AGAIN.

Dinkle—Say, I want to tell you something my little boy got off yesterday. Buffer—Cut it out, old man. I've heard it before. My boy got it off a week ago.

GET TOO FAMILIAR.

"Why don't you get around and become personally acquainted with some of the voters?" "I don't know that it's always a good plan," answered Senator Sorghum. "Sometimes too extended a personal acquaintance merely puts an office holder in the position of being perpetually cross-examined."

LIMITED SPACE.

"We always keep the shades of our flat drawn during the day." "That's foolish. You should raise them in the morning and allow them to remain that way."

"Oh, but when the sunshine comes it makes the flat seem so crowded."

GOT BUTLER'S OPINION.

After Benjamin F. Butler had become well established in his law practice, there were times when he required assistance in preparing cases. On one particular occasion he enlisted the services of a young and inexperienced lawyer to look after the minor details of the case.

The friends of the young man congratulated him on his good fortune in being associated with such learned counsel, and after the trial plied him with all sorts of questions concerning his particular part in the preparation of the case. "Did you offer any suggestions or advance any theories that tended to strengthen your case, or did the learned counsel with whom you were associated at any time during the trial consult you on any phase of the case or even ask your opinion?"

"Yes," replied the young legal light, "he did once. It was during the cross-examination of witnesses by the opposing counsel, which had continued at considerable length, that Mr. Butler, becoming irritated at the slowness of procedure, turned about in his seat and, motioning for me to incline my ear, whispered in a moderate but impressive manner: 'I think these seats are — hard, don't you?'"

THE HANDING OF A LEMON.

In the room occupied by the graduating class of a public school in one of the uptown districts of New York, an incident occurred which caused a great deal of amusement among the pupils. As Thanksgiving day was near at hand, it was customary that Miss N——, the teacher, in giving a series of lessons on object drawing, should ask her pupils to bring fruits, vases and other things to assist in the lesson. The following day, when Miss N—— called her class for the "objects," any number of vases, cups and pitchers were forthcoming. "Didn't any one bring fruit of any kind?" inquired the teacher. "I did!" cried a voice in the center of the room. Miss N—— walked toward the pupil, holding out her hand. Withdrawing her own hand from the recesses of her desk, the pupil who had responded extended gravely toward Miss N—— a lemon.

CAN RITE ALL RITE.

A United States army recruiting officer in a little Missouri town recently received the following letter: "Dear war boss: I read in the Kansas city times that you want me. I can read, rite and use the inglich lengwage all rite. I weigh abaud 165 pounds and I am neerly to yards long. my karakter is all rite to. I was never in gale, except once in the callaboose, but I never stole nothin. I reckon I cen kill 20 indians in one day, or spanyards too if I hafto. if yu send me som myo so I can come i jine sure, im strong as a bull and teres nothin de mater with me only a blak i, but i can see all rite. yurs for business."

QUITE A DIFFERENCE.

"What!" exclaimed the angry modiste. "You mean to say that Mrs. De Flasher used all the samples we sent up to make a fancy quilt? Why, she is an old crank." "But Mrs. De Flasher is worth $100,000." "Really? Well, in that case I suppose she is eccentric." "And she will inherit $500,000 by the first of the year." "Half a million? Why, write the lady a note at once and tell her she can have another bundle of samples and compliment her on being so delightfully bizarre."

GOT IT FIRST TIME.

"I am sure I shall die an early death," said a young lady, a teacher in a public school. "I have a class of boys. Unruly little wretches they are, too, and they worry me continually. The other day, during the lesson in grammar, I read out the sentence: 'What can you do that I cannot do?' and a little urchin jumped up and shouted: 'Play leap-frog.' Then there was a general laugh. I bit my lip, frowned, and ordered them to sit down. I felt like wringing his neck."

VALUE RECEIVED.

"It costs more to live than it did years ago," said the man who complains. "Yes," answered the man who enjoys modern conveniences; "but it's worth more."

HE HAD FOUR DEUCES.

Some years ago Bro. Thomas, a preacher, used to conduct services in a tent on River street, Boston, in what was at that time called Freeman's Grove. On one occasion a visiting reverend gentleman occupied the rostrum, and his subject was "Gambling and Its Results." In explaining what gambling was, the lecturer said:

"You take a hand of cards and commence playing. You bet 25 cents, the next man goes 50 cents better, the next man 'sees' it and goes 50 cents better, and I 'raise' it to ten dollars."

Before going more into details an old player, who had dropped in late to hear what the preacher had to say about cards, became excited at the recital of the betting and exclaimed:

"Great Scott, old man, you must have had a flush!"

The preacher, forgetting himself, replied: "No, I had better than that—four deuces."

TOO SUGGESTIVE

The Steer—"So you haven't much use for the football season, Mr. Porker?"

The Porker—"No, it always makes me nervous to hear them say they are going to kick the pigskin."

The Steer—"Yes, and I feel uncomfortable myself. It always brings thoughts of the gridiron."

COMPANY FOR THE DOG.

A miner in the coal fields of Pennsylvania not long ago surprised his friends by marrying an extremely unprepossessing woman. He had been reckoned a confirmed hater of the other sex, and so it was with considerable curiosity that his friends sought out the reason for his step.

"What did ye go an' git spliced with that ugly Dick?" asked some one.

"She ain't no beauty—that's right," agreed Dick. "The fact is, that there dog of mine, he was simply pinin' for somebody to loo, after him when I was away at the pit. I couldn't bear to leave him by himself, so I hits on the idea of marryin'. She ain't handsome, that old girl, but she's mighty good company for the dog!"

THE SCRAPPLE SEASON.

The scrapple season dawns upon us, with its ravishing perfumes, and its poetry. Scrapple follows sauerkraut, and is itself followed by the buckwheat cake. The three constitute and compose the great gastronomic trilogy of the late autumn. They are equally savory, and their ineffable essences are alike stimulating and revivifying. Sauerkraut, perhaps, is a shade the most nourishing, and the buckwheat cake, it may be admitted, is the most romantic of the trio. But even against these irresistibly seductive delicatessen, scrapple holds its own. For the brief month following the falling of the leaves it is the king victual and master aliment of the great plain people.—Exchange.

ADVICE TO CANDIDATES.

An Australian M. P. advises candidates for parliament to be seen as often as possible among the mourners in the constituencies they are courting. "It shows the domestic, the family, feeling strong; it denotes an observance of religious conventions, and it is taken as proof of a loyal heart, a heart that beats for an old acquaintance even in dust. At one contest I attended on an average two funerals a day every day of the last week, and the polling was my top score."

JOHN'S OPINION.

"John, my poor little dog, Prince, has something the matter with him. What do you suppose it is?" said the fashionable lady.

"And, sure, do you kiss him, ma'am?" asked the coachman.

"Of course, I kiss him." "Well, then, perhaps it's microbes he has, ma'am!"
