In favor of Osculation.

Some intelligent gentleman proved not long ago by chemistry that Juliet never took any sleeping portion anyhow, that she died from the contraction of germs which she had obtained from Romeo, who had been kissing one of her gloves that he had accidentally found in the trash pile. Be that as it may, the fact remains that a hygienic reason was found for the antagonism to kissing in the East.

We are glad to announce that the swains can kiss all they want to now without fear of getting anything but wives. Dr. Worthington of the Harvard Medical School has declared that "there is every reason to believe that when two wholesome persons meet lip to lip, they break away without upsetting the bacterial balance, and doubly instructive to learn that people in love can maintain even a bacterial balance, and doubly instructive to learn that lips may meet without any evidence of disease. We have known this for some time, but we hesitated to make the announcement in view of the general feeling to the contrary on the part of the medical profession.—From the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier.

Saturday in History.

Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit, the German physicist, who perfected the thermometer to its present standard, was born at Danzig, May 14, 1686. In 1720 he first conceived the idea of using mercury instead of the spirits of wine in the construction of thermometers and by means of the innovation the accuracy of the instrument was very much improved. His thermometer, since its introduction, has been in general use in Holland, Great Britain and the United States.

The invention of the thermometer is ascribed to Galileo in 1579, although several others claimed the honor. The weather glass of the seventeenth century consisted of a bulb and tube inverted and opening into a cup of colored liquid.

Fahrenheit adopted a scale of 212 degrees, ranging from 32 degrees below the temperature of freezing water, up to that of boiling water at sea level.

The Centigrade thermometer is used in France and is in very high favor among scientific men everywhere. It consists of 100 degrees, decimally divided and graduated from the freezing of the boiling point of water. In nearly all scientific observations, temperature is given as so many degrees Centigrade.

A Radical Departure.

There never was a time in the history of the world when good stories and articles could command such large prices as they do today. It is an extremely expensive thing to publish a high-class magazine nowadays, filled with the best products of the most famous authors and artists.

Yet together with its many attractive features THE CHICAGO RECORD-HERALD furnishes its readers with its Sunday Magazine section that compares favorably with the best weeklies and monthlies, and has some merits peculiar to itself. The most famous writers and illustrators contribute to it. Some of the choicest novels of the year are published serially in its columns before they see the light in book form. The best new humorist since Mr. Dooley began writing is a regular contributor to its columns alone. To furnish such a magazine with every copy of a Sunday newspaper is an amazing venture, yet the experiment has proved a complete success and is now firmly established.

Misses Edna Leitz and May Morrison of California, Mo., who have been visiting Mrs. Clara Moore and family returned to their homes Wednesday morning.

Wednesday in History.

On May 18, 1774, General Gage, the commander in chief of the British army in North America, began his administration as military governor of Massachusetts, and imagined that its colonial difficulties were ended. It was not long however, before Gage was writing home for reinforcements. He found himself unable to enforce the new laws with which parliament had provided him. The Americans met at Faneuil Hall and declared that England had no right to change the laws of the province and that furthermore the new government set up by Gage under the Regulation Act was clearly unconstitutional. Virginia backed up Massachusetts, and so the administration of this war governor was a stormy one, although he was a man who dearly loved ease. General Gage was not such a fierce and blood-thirsty man as he is sometimes painted. He was mild and good natured and utterly unfit for the task of bringing a free people into submission. He had instructions to punish Samuel Adams, John Hancock, Joseph Warren and others, but never did he so much as attempt their arrest. The determined attitude of the patriots bewildered him, and they kept so carefully within the law that he could not punish them. The colonists continued their town meetings and went ahead arranging conventions, the governor simply looking on, amazed at their perversity. And so it was that the administration of Gage at Boston although backed by an army led naturally to the climax of American Independence.

Hon. David R. Francis has announced his candidacy for the United States Senate. Mr. Francis announces that he is more interested in party harmony than in personal preferment. This certainly is a patriotic spirit and one to be commended by every Democrat in the State. The party has suffered and gone down to defeat through factional bitterness. If you have a hatchet, bury it. Mr. Francis is one of the ablest men in the party and has filled the offices of Mayor of St. Louis, Governor of the State, a member of the Cabinet and President of the St. Louis World's Fair Exposition with signal ability.—The Holden Enterprise.
