HARDEST WORK TO BE FOUND

No One Looking for a Sincere Would Eagerly Take Up the Job of War Correspondent.

The work of a war correspondent, if he is the real thing, is no sinecure. General Sherman threatened to hang all of them he found with his army.

The Japanese would allow no newspaper men to go to the front with their soldiers. I know one of the American army officers who was detailed on "observation" duty with the Japs. Whenever anything really big was to occur the Japanese officers arranged a polite little ceremonial to take the foreign officer about ten miles from the seat of action.

They didn't want to be "observed" when performing their hardest fighting.

I knew quite well some of the English correspondents in the South African war. One of them lost his arm. He was the original of the "Great War Eagle" in Kipling's "Light That Failed."

Archibald Forbes did more strenuous work, perhaps, than two-thirds of the officers in the wars in which he made his brilliant reputation as a correspondent.

Napoleon didn't allow correspondents, as we know them, to travel with headquarters. In our Revolution, although many weekly papers were published at the time, the news was old. Nobody ever mentioned the sufferings at Valley Forge while it was happening.

Rothschild "beat" the newspaper correspondents at Waterloo, because he got back to London first with the news and made millions by his inside knowledge. He bought securities which had been greatly depressed by a fear of Napoleon's triumph.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE SPRING HATS

Wife—I saw a dream of a hat today, dearest.

Hubby—Buy it while it may be had. Most of 'em are nightmares this year.

ASS WAS OUTCLASSED.

A silly ass tried his strength against a steam engine recently. When the 8:32 train from Tallight was coming into Templeogue the other day, a donkey wandered out from a gateway and was struck by the engine. The animal was evidently knocked up against the wall, and rebounded under the first carriage of the train, which was derailed, causing considerable consternation amongst the passengers. The driver pulled up promptly, and thus averted what might have been a serious catastrophe. Owing to the position of the derailed carriage, traffic was interrupted for a considerable time. Needless to add, the donkey was killed, and he is the third member of his race to have joined the silent majority in consequence of his hardihood in grazing on the tram line. About a week ago two fine specimens of the asinine tribe were done to death by the steam tram within a few hundred yards of where the present accident occurred.—London Mail.

WISH EASILY GRATIFIED.

"A great deal that we call pleasure is largely imaginary," said the ready-made philosopher.

"I suppose so," replied the man who was working on his automobile.

"Now, wouldn't you like to be able to take a long ride without having to worry about speed limits or spark plugs or tires or anything at all?"

"I should say so!"

"Well, here's a street-car ticket."

APPROPRIATE.

Knicker—They are planning state pensions for widowed mothers.

Bocker—Shouldn't there be a little of the long green for grass widows? —Judge.
