

MANY PREMIUMS AT MISSOURI CORN SHOW

Farmers' Week at the University of Missouri, Jan. 11-15, Will Have Many Attractions.

There's a big bunch of valuable premiums awaiting the winners of many classes in the Missouri State Corn Show at Columbia, January 11-15, during Farmers' Week at the University of Missouri. The official premium lists are now being sent out to applicants by C. B. Hutchison of the College of Agriculture.

In the several classes of white and yellow corn, the state has been divided into two sections, the northern and the southern. These are also classes for other than yellow and white corn. The premiums offered for the three bushel classes and the champion bushel are farm implements valued at from $35 to $120. Cash premiums are offered in the men's and boy's acre yield contests.

For the boys between 10 and 18 years old, there are several classes and a number of prizes, some of them cash. There's a chance for some Missouri farm boys to win valuable premiums by exhibiting their corn at this show. In the small grains division there are prizes for wheat, oats, cowpeas, soybeans, and alfalfa, clover and timothy seed. The best exhibits of the whole show will be taken to the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco.

A large number of farmers are expected at Columbia during the Farmers' Week. Last year there were more than 2,600, and there ought to be more this year. Missouri has about the largest attendance at her Farmers' Week of any state in the union. The week, including the short courses and the banquet is under the management of the College of Agriculture of the University of Missouri and the State Board of Agriculture.

Mr. Campbell is to be congratulated; the clientel of the Higginsville post office are to be congratulated, and Mr. Hamlin is to be commended for making so popular a choice.

By LEIGH MITCHELL HODGES

IN THE NORTH AMERICAN

READ of counts and princes being given iron crosses
For deeds of valor done by un-named men,
In looming sums of thousands I am told of battle losses,
Dead, wounded, missing,—tens of thousands—then
My thoughts are turned to mothers, wives and sisters sadly waiting,
And I see them given crosses—iron crosses they must bear
Through dreary lives of losses born of war's relentless hating.
And for these, the lonely waiters, is my prayer.

O Father, while the kings and captains call to Thee for victory,
I plead for these who may not hold their loved ones close again.
Bend low to calm the children who are crying at the strangeness,
And to soothe the weeping women—softly weeping for their men.

I hear the battle-thunder as the ranks are rent asunder,
And I see the ghastly glory of the hosts who fought and died,
I feel the shock of charges that are grinding legions under,
And I wonder at the wreckage on the fields where swept the tide—
But my heart's eyes turn to wander to the little homes back yonder
Where the women and the children yester morn their men were kissing;
Where the women and the children through long days and nights are waiting
To be brave when news comes—wounded, dead or missing!

O Father, while the kings and captains loudly claim Thy favor
Stretch out Thy hands to these who wait with courage passing praise;
Bend low to calm the children who are aging in the strangeness
And to soothe the women weeping through these lonely, dragging days!

I see the great war ended and the nations settling payment,
I hear the blare of trumpets over terms that balance loss,
Victorious kings and captains clad in dazzling gold-deck'd raiment,
Smile or shout their satisfaction—yet the shadow of a cross
Falls athwart the scene of splendor (bathed in blood of un-named men folk!)
And above the high announcement of the profit and the cost
Sounds the sighing and the weeping of the women and the children
Who cannot see the glory through their tears for loved ones lost.

O Father, while the kings and captains lift their swords to signal,
Turn Thou to stroke the hearts that bleed in little homes made bare;
Bend low to calm the children who are crying for their fathers,
And to soothe the lonely women who are weeping everywhere!

No need of having rousy chickens around. Conkey Roup Remedy in the drinking water keeps the germs away; also drives them out. Don't let rousp eats your profits—get a package of Conkeys now. Westerman & Rankin, Druggists.
