ALWAYS CLUBS OF A SORT

In Civilized Life the Association of Men of Like Interests Has Been Matter of Course.

In the eighteenth century the man of London passed the largest part of his time in coffee houses and taverns, and when one seeks for him after midday he will probably be found in a tavern.

No habit was so universal in every class as this of association in some place of entertainment; it was part of the life alike of the nobleman and the tradesman.

While the former enjoyed himself in one of the numerous houses in the west end, the latter was surrounded by his business rivals at the Globe tavern in Fleet street or at the Sixpenny Card club or at the Free and Easy at the Queen's Arms in St. Paul's churchyard.

But when we go with the man of London to his coffee house or tavern we should not think too much of the place, for coffee house and tavern were each only a building which by reason of its existence was the most convenient for the purpose of assemblies, whether of business or of pleasure.

The important fact is the remarkable and constant and often informal association of men of like interests, tastes or occupations for purposes political, commercial, literary or social.

These associations, every one of which is usually called a club, even if it was without rules or officers, sprang rapidly into being from the beginning of the century, so rapidly that places by no means always suitable had to be used for their meetings.

FALLACY OF LONG STANDING

That Frost is Most Likely to Occur in the "Light of the Moon" is a Wrong Idea.

One of the most tenacious beliefs is that the weather is affected by the movement of the moon. It is generally considered that frost is more likely to occur in the "light of the moon" than at any other time. For this reason crops which the frost is likely to destroy are planted at such a time as to be certain to avoid a full moon.

The moon reflects sunlight to the earth and produces the tides. It has minor effects, such as changing the position of the earth and causing minute deflections of the magnetic needle; these last, are, however, so small that they have only effect upon refined instruments of detection, and it has been proved conclusively these two have no relation to the change of weather. Regarding the two former effects named, it is quite easy to understand that reflected sunlight from the moon cannot affect the weather. In the first place, more light is received from the sun in thirty minutes than from the moon in one year, and, moreover, the greatest reflection is at full moon; from a logical point of view then it should be warmer instead of colder at full moon. This should disprove any argument that the reflected light makes it colder at full moon.

British Emancipation.

The first day of August, 1834, is often mentioned, but erroneously, as the day on which the slaves in the British colonies were set free. They did not get their actual freedom, but an apprenticeship which was to precede and prepare for their freedom. It was enacted that all slaves should become "apprenticed laborers" to their masters. These slaves were of two classes. One class received actual freedom in 1838 and the other in 1840. It was found that on August 1, 1834, there were 770,230 slaves in the colonies affected by this emancipation act. All negroes born after that date were born free. Twenty million pounds sterling, $100,000,000, was ultimately paid to the owners of these slaves, this sum being distributed ratably according to the market price of slaves in each colony.

Education City Girls Miss.

City girls of any class rarely if ever have any domestic education or training, unless they get it in their schools. They are taught the boundaries of the United States and the source of the Nile; they learn that if you buy products at a certain price and sell at a higher you make money, but what to do with the money when you make it no one discusses. It is all making money or things, never the right use of money or things, that is impressed upon boys and girls from their primary class on to the bitter end. The children of well-to-do families in smaller places have opportunities for education in the real things of life which these others often lack, but since our grandmother's day education and training in home affairs within the home walls has been neglected to a dangerous degree.—Woman's World.

Nova Scotia's History.

When discovered by the British in 1497-98 Nova Scotia was not named. A few years later it was settled by the French, who called it Acadia. It passed to the English by the treaty of Utrecht, in 1713, and they changed the name from Acadia to Nova Scotia. This name was first used in a grant made by King James I, who was born in Scotland, and chose a name in honor of his native country. The royal grant under the name was made to Sir William Alexander, a Scotchman, who wrote poor poetry, and was created Lord Stirling by King James.

The Naval Advisory Board.

Secretary Daniels is now equipped with aids to naval betterment, which none of his predecessors possessed. He has an Advisory Board composed of twenty-three of the most eminent inventors, scientists and engineers of the country. It will be the duty of this board to help things to make naval defense more efficient. This covers a wide range of activities.

Perhaps one of its most important duties will be to give consideration to the multitude of ideas and inventions which are constantly being offered the government for inspection and adoption, and as constantly ignored. Inventors complain loudly that they can not even get a hearing in the Army and Navy departments for their ideas. Doubtless the vast majority of devices and ideas are impractical.

The railroads have found such to be the case, yet the railroads have secured some wonderful devices in this way. Men who know nothing practically about railroading feel themselves competent to invent car couplings, switching devices, brakes, etc., nearly all of which fail in some important practical detail.

This is true, no doubt, of devices and ideas offered the government. Yet in the vast amount of chaff there must be some wheat, and it is worth the winnowing to discover it. It will be remembered that Erickson could get little encouragement from the government for the Monitor. The nation was then in a death grapple for its life, and yet the inventor of the Monitor could make little progress, and finally had to construct the first ship with private capital, and actually win a battle with it before he could get the government to accept it.

If the inventor of the greatest revolution in modern naval construction had such difficulty in war, what obstacles must the inventors in peace encounter. Here is a board composed of men with open minds and approaching the subject from many different angles. Neither professional arrogance nor minds running all in one groove will be encountered on this board. If there is anything at all in an idea or a device, somebody in this number is certain to see it. We may reasonably expect that, through this means, the inventive genius of the entire country will be made available for this problem of national defense.

Secretary Daniels deserves credit for putting this idea into concrete form, regardless of who may have been its originator. The devotion of their time and talents to the service of their country without compensation by these men of science and accomplishment is an exhibition of the highest ideal of American patriotism.—St. Louis Star.

George Washington—"Father of His Country"

EVERY AMERICAN knows that without "Immortal Washington" our National Independence would have been impossible. Few, however, know that the greatest battle of Washington's life was fought to secure for his countrymen the Constitution of the United States. Almost immediately after the Revolution it seemed that all the great sacrifice of blood and treasure had been in vain. The original thirteen states refused to work in harmony, either in spirit or in law. The new Republic was tottering to its foundations. At this critical period in American history the most brilliant men of each state met in convention and unanimously elected Washington as president—undoubtedly the most momentous gathering of its kind the world has ever known. Here he displayed as great ability as a lawmaker as he had as a warrior. For months the Fathers of the Republic labored, and finally adopted our present National law, which forever guarantees Religious, Commercial and Personal Liberty. This was in 1787. Seventy years later Anheuser-Busch established their great institution on the tenets of the Federal Law which Washington did so much to create. Like all of the great men of his time, he was a moderate user of good old barley brews. For three generations Anheuser-Busch have brewed honest malt and hop beers. To-day 7500 people are daily employed to keep pace with the ever-increasing public demand. The great popularity of their famous brand—BUDWEISER—due to quality, purity, mildness and exquisite flavor, has made its sales exceed those of any other beer by millions of bottles.
