"SWAT THE FLY" EARLY

By L. Haseman, Missouri College of Agriculture

But why "swat the fly" in the winter when you fail to see any? Listen!

"I am a big fat mother fly and I live in a large house, tucked away in a crack behind a door casing. The housekeeper has overlooked me. She thinks we are all dead. I have a friend or two in the basement and a cousin in the attic. We have seen each other a few times since winter set in, though we hide away most of the time. Several of my friends and near relatives selected the barn for their winter quarters and I hope they are comfortable. Some live outdoors in sheltered places and some in other houses. A few of my younger brothers and sisters were still feeding in a filthy stable on the other side of the road last fall when I developed wings and flew away with filth sticking to me. This filth I have since wiped off on cake, bread, and other exposed foods in the pantry. Some of these brothers and sisters will no doubt escape the cold, as stable manure stays warm if it is permitted to accumulate in the stable all winter. These are now enclosed in small, hard brown cases and as soon as warm weather comes I shall go to the stable and see if I can find any of them.

"My city cousin says:

"We have had a few warm days but it is still too cool to venture out. In a few days I expect to move. I am hungry and need more air. I long for the day when I can leave the house for a warm sun-bath. Then I will find some filth on which to lay a few eggs. There was plenty of filth around here last fall and of course none of it has been removed during the winter. My first crop of eggs will be laid about the middle of March if all goes well. By the middle of April I will have grandchildren in abundance. By June my offspring will have scattered all over town and by August we will be in full possession of the place, holding council in the City Hall, placing sick and wounded in the hospitals by the dozens, and handling the city government about as we please. This city does not fear us and is not prepared so by the time it gets ready for us we will be in full control. I hope we may have a successful year and all looks successful so far, but I fear that a big, bad man at the Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station is telling people how to spoil 'all that.'"

Is winter work worth while? What can be done? First kill that boastful fly behind the door-casing; then go to the attic and basement, to the garage and stable and let not one fly escape. Clean all stables and remove all filth in which the eggs and maggots may harbor, and scatter in the fields. Be sure that the neighbors do likewise and if necessary induce the City Council to require that all premises are properly cleaned up during the winter. Then you will have at least a fighting chance with this filthy scourge of the human race. Preparedness means success in such a campaign.

Fruit Tree Quacks

Some so-called nursery salesmen operating in Missouri are making promises that seem too good to be true. The Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station wishes to warn farmers and fruit growers to be very careful about investing in stock of an unknown variety of supposed special merit and against signing contracts to buy and grow fruit trees, vines, or other nursery stock on the strength of promises that it can be sold later at very high prices.

Buyers should require the nursery salesman to show the special permits which the law requires them to secure from the Chief Inspector of Nurseries and Orchards. Salesmen who cannot show such permits should be reported at once to the Experiment Station at Columbia for investigation, but the honesty of those who do have such permits cannot be guaranteed by the Experiment Station, although there is a strong presumption that the men who have complied with the law by taking out permits will be much more likely to be honest and straightforward than the man who is selling in violation of the law.

The exhibition of such a permit shows that the agent is registered for the sale and distribution of stock which has been inspected and found free from dangerous insects and diseases. There are plenty of responsible agents in the state representing responsible nurseries and orders can be placed by mail with nurserymen who will look after the interests of their customers honestly. So with a little care the buyer can get exactly what he wishes without dealing with questionable parties. He should order standard varieties which he knows are doing well in his locality and refuse the fancy varieties on which fabulous profits are promised.—L. Haseman, Chief Inspector of Nurseries and Orchards, Columbia, Missouri.

You occasionally see it stated that colds do not result from cold weather. That is rank foolishness. Were it true colds would be as prevalent in midsummer as in mid-winter. It is effectual and is highly recommended by people who have used it for many years as occasion required, and know its real value. Obtainable Everywhere.
