And Other Household Goods Saved.

Managers Appointed for Municipal Election—Personal Notes.

Branchville, Nov. 3.—Special: On last Wednesday Mr. James Irick, who lives in the country a few miles from town, had the misfortune of losing his dwelling house by fire. The fire originated at the stove and it was only a very short time before the house was burned down. Mrs. Irick, who was seriously ill at the time, no doubt would have been burned up but for the fact that the family happened to be home at the time. Mrs. Irick had to be taken out of the house on a bed. Most of the household goods were saved but the house was a total loss. The value of the house was estimated at $1,500, with no insurance.

THE NEXT ATTRACTION

At the Academy of Music Will Be November 17th.

The next attraction at the Academy of Music will be a strong company in Beulah Poynter's dramatization of the ever-popular novel, by Mrs. Mary J. Holes, "Lena Rivers," with Miss Edna Marshall as "Lena." This attraction will be here November 17th. "Lena Rivers" has endured the test of more than half a century of enthusiastic readers, readers who must number several millions, for besides the great sale the book has long enjoyed it is always in demand at the circulating libraries.

As prepared for the stage by Miss Poynter, it tells a simple but absorbing story. "Lena" is a girl of the North concerning whose parentage there is more or less doubt. She lives with her grandmother and they are very poor. A turn in affairs takes them to the South to live with an uncle whose wife and daughter lose no opportunity to make the little girl feel uncomfortable. Not even the plain frocks in which they dress her can conceal her beauty, however, and before long she attracts the attention of a gallant young man of the South who wins her love, only to be met by opposition from his parents. In the end everything is straightened out nicely and the honor of her name is vindicated and the last curtain descends with the audience assured that "they lived happily ever after."

Miss Edna Marshall is supported by an exceptionally strong cast.

SHORT COTTON CROP

CAUSE THE SPINNERS TO BUY UP AND USE LINTERS.

Manufacturers the World Over Are Trying Substitute for the High Price Longer Staple.

A dispatch from Atlanta to the Augusta Herald says with the price of cotton sky-high and the cotton crop throughout the South acknowledged to be very short, the spinners the world over are in the market for any substitute for the long staple for manufacturing purposes.

This state of affairs has given a new impetus to the market for "linters," as they are commonly called, which is that fibre which the cotton oil mills of the South take from the cotton seed before crushing the same to extract the oil and grind the cake into meal.

This staple is not very long, but this year, on account of the splendid weather during which the cotton has been picked from the fields, it is unusually free from stains and of admirable spinning quality.

As a result, there are scores of buyers of linters in the South who are visiting the various cotton oil mills and mill headquarters buying up those bales of linters—Georgia alone making 75,000 bales of 500 pounds each—which are to be shipped abroad for spinning purposes.

Harry R. Solomon, of the firm of Solomon Bros. & Co., of New York; Hanover, Germany, Lille, France, one of the largest export-import houses in the world, spent Thursday in Atlanta on his last stop of his two months' trip through the South purchasing the linters offered for sale in and around this market.

These "linters" are shipped abroad where the staple is spun into mercerized silk and manufactured into various articles of wear and imported into this country. Those linters which are not sold for spinning purposes are manufactured in this country into cloth, felts, made up into mattresses and used as a padding for comforts.

The sale of "linters," another most interesting by-product of the cotton seed, now a most important part of the cotton crop, has only been developed in the South a
