Patience.
Have patience, heart!
That were no rose that were not first a closed bud.
How comes the day? Not with the noonday sun overhead,
But slowly stealing up the east, in faintest red.
Have patience, heart! What so thine own life's dawning good.
Seek not at wroth to make the day as bright as noon.
Force not the bud, before its time to be a rose.
How slowly, when we watch the sky, the day-light grows!
And yet, for all, indeed, the sun goes down too soon.
Have patience, heart!
For rain will come; thine own self knows how the dew-drops fall.
Seek not to stay the clouds before they've set at their train.
Or else across the sky the clouds may come again.
Have patience, grieving heart! for good must come to all.
Have patience, heart!
What though no kisses fall upon thy tired eyes,
And love's hands not its rose to thee, nor day is fair?
Mourn not; perhaps thy love needs heaven's purer air.
Oh, heart! be sure 'twill wait for thee in Paradise.
—Amy E. Branchard, in Harper's Weekly.

BILL'S CHILD.
No one ever knew where the child came from, or even its name.
One day a sloop freighted with brick was unloading up town, and a hand on deck was tossing bricks, two by two, to another man on the dock. All of a sudden a wee little chap, not more than 2 years old, came toddling along, got right in the way, and was knocked over by the flying bricks.
Bill Forster, who was handling the load, was a rough man. It had not been exactly his fault that the child had been knocked down, still he felt very sorry for it. The little fellow's head was badly cut, and he was stupefied. He was carried into the cabin of the sloop, and there lay quite motionless. The Captain of the sloop sent to the police station, and the surgeon came. The child was carefully examined. The surgeon said the case might be a serious one and that the little boy had better be taken to the hospital. Forster had a sister, who worked in a laundry, and at once he sent for her. Molly Forster hurried down to the wharf, took the child in her lap, and listened breathlessly to what the surgeon said.
The cabin of the brick sloop was not a handsome place to look at. It was dirty and slovenly, hot and close. Molly Forster set about making it tidy. She opened the little windows of the cabin, and kept off the crowd who were swarming in the narrow quarters. She fanned the child, laid it on a coarse pillow, having first spread her clean apron over it, and bathed the poor baby's head, trying to stanch the flow of blood from the wound. "If," said the surgeon, "you could keep the child perfectly quiet for a while it would be all for the better. I am afraid to jolt him in the ambulance. Maybe he will come to before long. It is rather cooler here on the river than in the hot wards of a hospital. Can you take charge of him until I come back? I will see you this evening." Molly had already torn up her handkerchief and bandaged the child's head. Now she followed the surgeon's directions. The doctor was a humane man, for when he left he put a half dollar into Molly's hand and told her to buy some ice to cool the water she was using on the bandages.
Molly Forster fanned and fanned that little sufferer, and bathed his head, and was tender with the child. About sunset the surgeon came again, and just then the child opened his eyes.
"Well, that's a good sign," said the doctor. "Now hadn't you better advertise him since no one has come for him? Somebody will claim him, I suppose. I can arrange for you to keep him if you want to."
Although the accident was reported in two brief lines in all the newspapers, and notwithstanding the efforts of the police to find the parents of the child, no one ever came for it. All that night Molly Forster nursed the child. Occasionally Bill would push his hard-lined and weather-beaten face into the cabin window and look wistfully at the little child. He never went to sleep that night, but kept walking up and down the deck. At daybreak he said to Molly in a hoarse whisper: "Molly, take that kid to your room. It's got to be done."
Bill Forster, who was a man of 40, I have said was rough. I do not know how it happens, but handling bricks seems to make people coarse and rather brutal. Bill would take not only one glass of whisky, but as many as he could drink. Mixing with a crowd of worse than he was who frequented the saloons, he was much given to drinking, and his face was as often as not disfigured with a black eye or a cut lip. Bill earned about a dollar and a quarter a day, and when the week was up he never had a penny left. Perhaps if Bill had not been a little drowsy and stupid that morning from too much liquor got in the way he (Bill) would have been more careful how he threw his bricks.

The week after Molly had taken charge of the child Bill resisted the temptation to go on a spree and gave his sister a dollar and a half. That was the first time for years that he had ever saved a cent. The week after that Bill did even better. There was Molly working as hard as she could at the wash board or the ironing board, earning 70 cents a day, and feeding the child. That shamed Bill. It happened that the little boy's short frock had been stained with blood. Molly had carefully washed it, but still Bill thought he saw stains on it and that worried him sick.
Next week, when he saw his sister, who was waiting on the wharf for him with the little fellow in his arms, he said, "See here, Molly, its kind of hard on you, having to feed this little fellow. Bread and milk and potatoes costs money, and nursing him takes away lots of your time. Anyways, a dressing of that kid would be just ruinous to you. Here's a dollar and a half for his keep, and here's a dollar besides, and buy calico or something and make a frock for that child, and mind you burn the one he's got on, and next time I see him let him be looking prime. Won't you?"

and over again, and held out his pretty little mouth to be kissed. Oh, Bill, his senses is coming back to him, slow, but sure," and Molly cuddled the sleeping child closer to her breast.
Bill kept right on in the good way he had planned for himself, and never swerved a hair's breadth. Molly was his savings bank. Brother and sister contributed to the child's support. In a month Bill was richer than he had ever been in his life. Then he insisted that Molly should rent a better room. The one she lived in, he said, looked out on a dingy, dreary back yard. "Stands to reason," said Bill, "that a baby should see horses and trucks and things a-moving about in the streets. It makes 'em likely."
"Little Bill!"—so they called him. Molly insisted that her brother's name should serve for the child—improved, but to go slowly for big Bill. The police surgeon was called in, Bill Forster insisting on paying him a fee. The doctor gave was a guarded one. "There is manifest improvement, perhaps, as rapid as you are a capital nurse, but I am sure your kindness will help the child. He is, I believe,"
"You are a capital nurse, but I am sure your kindness will help the child. He is, I believe,"

Burned to Death, and Restored to Life.
I know of a man near Maxey's, Ga., who for ten or twelve years was almost a solid sore from head to foot.
For three years, his appearance being so horribly repulsive, he refused to let any one see him. The disease after eating his flesh, commenced on his skull bones. He tried all doctors and medicines without benefit and no one thought he could possibly recover. At last he began the use of B. B. B., and after using six bottles, his sores were all healed and he was a sound man.
He looks just like a man who had been burned to death and then restored to life. The best men of the county know of this case, and several doctors and merchants have spoken of it as a most wonderful case.

SENSIBLE PEOPLE
ARE NOT EASILY DECEIVED, FOR they know quite well that good and bad clothing are alike made to sell; and who was ever known to advertise poor clothing? They know how nearly all clothes keep the finest and sell on paper—at less than it cost to make them. Finest prices, well made and nicely fitting clothes, together with a good name (justly deserved), are bound to sell.
The above being a fact, I state it merely to enforce the point that I have ready for inspection the largest and best assorted stock of Fall and Winter Clothing for men, youths and boys, that can be found in the State. They are needless in variety and honestly good all the way through; even the underlinings are shrunken and the trimmings used are meant to wear, not merely to help sell the goods, as every garment is warranted as represented. There are unassailable ramparts behind which I invite you to deal. I am not here for a season; I am here to stay. My stock this season is the largest I have ever carried, and it embraces every style and fashionable garment that is made in this vicinity, to compare them with the merchant tailor work, and it is with real pleasure to state that the business of this EMPORIUM OF FASHION is steadily on the increase. My large and constantly increasing patronage testifies more forcibly than words that the values offered by me are not equalled by any house in the State.
To prove the truth of this I ask buyers to make their own comparisons, as I enjoy them a reputation above that and beyond that of all others in this vicinity at least producing a superior class of regular Tailor-made Clothing and Gents' Furnishing Goods, Hats and Fine Shoes. This is the headquarters for the correct styles in men's and boys' attire. All orders sent by mail will be promptly attended to.

NOTICE TO FARMERS.
I respectfully call to the attention of the Farmers of Clarendon the fact that I have secured the Agency for the Corbin Disk Harrow, Planet Jr. Horse Hoe and Cultivator, Johnson Harvester and the Continental Reaper. I have one of each of these instruments for display at my stables, and will take pleasure in showing and explaining their utility. No progressive farmer can afford to do without these implements.

Notice!
I desire to call to the attention of the Mill Men and Cotton Planters of Clarendon, that I have secured the agency for this County for the DANIEL PRATT REVOLVING HEAD GIN. Having used this Gin for several years I can recommend it as the best Gin now in use. Any information in regard to the Gin will be cheerfully given. I can also supply the people of Clarendon with any other machinery which they may need, at the lowest prices. Parties wishing to purchase Gins will find it to their interest to give their orders early.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING.
A book of 100 pages. The best book for an advertiser to consult, be he experienced or otherwise. Contains lists of newspapers and estimates of the cost of advertising. The advertiser who wants to spend one dollar, finds in it the information he requires, while for him who will invest one hundred thousand dollars in advertising, a page is indicated which will meet his requirements.
