THE KETCHMO TRAP HELPS WEEVIL CONTROL

On another page we are carrying an advertisement of the Christal Ketchmo Boll Weevil Trap. This trap has been invented by Messrs. C. C. Christal and C. P. Gable, both of Gable, this County. While these gentlemen do not make any extravagant claims for their machine, they do say that it will help control the ravages of this pest.

The writer, while on his way to Columbia recently, stopped and talked to a farmer on the other side of Camden, who was using one of these machines and he was loud in praises of its merits.

In the letter in the advertisement from the McFaddin young men it looks as though if a farmer went over his field every day or every other day it would only be a question of a very short time until there would not be a weevil left in the field.

Any and all methods tending to the extermination of the weevil, if strenuously worked, will mean but one thing—his damages will be brought down to the lowest mark. The poison method undoubtedly is good, but we believe that the trap is the most economical and we believe that Christal's Ketchmo Trap is the logical machine.

CANDIDATES FOR CONGRESS SPEAK

Messrs. Logan, Morrison and Hutto Tell the Voters of Their Platforms

Messrs. W. Turner Logan, of Charleston, incumbent; J. B. Morrison, of McClellanville, and I. S. Hutto, of St. George, candidates for the Democratic nomination as Representative from the First Congressional District, spoke at the campaign meeting in the Hibernian Hall last night. The district includes the counties of Charleston, Colleton, Clarendon, Berkeley and Dorchester.

Mr. Logan received much applause when he was introduced to the audience. He said that in Congress he had worked for the district, always considering the welfare of the farmers. Mr. Morrison stressed the need of good roads and an inland passage. He cited his advocacy of the State Highway Commission and of the Santee river bridge. Mr. Hutto said that financial relief of the farmers would be the first matter he would press if he were elected to Congress.

Mr. Morrison

Mr. Morrison announced his platform as one of rigid economy and stated that he, as a farmer himself, would, if elected, be a representative of the farmers of the district. He deplored the fact that heretofore they had not had just representation, but that the efforts of the Representative of the First district had been centered on the City of Charleston.

Mr. Morrison said that he will do his utmost to have the national government appropriate funds to be used in the improvement of the present highways and for the construction of new ones. He would also labor for what he termed a much-needed facility—an inland waterway, running from New England to Florida.

He directed attention to his efforts in the State Legislature in 1915 to bring about the establishment of the State Highway Commission, and said that he was one of the originators of the plan to build the Santee bridge, which is now in the course of construction, in order that Charleston and the lower country might be connected with the upper section of the State.

He spoke of the farmers redeeming the South after the War Between the States, and said that the farmers would redeem the country in the present crisis.

Mr. Morrison in conclusion paid a tribute to the women, saying that up until some time ago he had not been a believer in woman suffrage, but that he was now glad to announce that he had changed his mind in regard to this question and that the future of the country lies in the hands of its women.

Kids Is Kids

Mr. Hutto was the next candidate for Congress to be heard, introducing himself as the "Duke of Dorchester," say that this title had been bestowed upon him by Mr. Logan, but stating that the boll weevil had taken away everything which might entitle him to be known as the "Duke of Dorchester."

Mr. Hutto did not wait until the end to address the women; instead, he told them in the beginning that it was a very great pleasure to be privileged to speak to them.

"I am a candidate for Congress because I am unwilling to continue to live under present conditions," said Mr. Hutto in announcing his platform. He said that the present financial depression in the South is the result of the Republican party diverting funds which were justly due to Southern farmers and business men to the North, saying that Southern farmers have been forced to sell their cotton at absurdly low figures as a result of not having funds which would allow them to hold it.

Mr. Hutto confidently predicted his election and said that one of the first matters which he would consider upon his arrival in Washington would be the question of the financial relief of the Southern farmer.

He also promised to work for the relief of the unemployment situation, saying that it was a disgrace to the country that so many people were unable to secure employment.

Mr. Logan

Mr. Logan, the incumbent, was the next Congressional candidate to speak, and as he arose and advanced to the speaker's table he was greeted with prolonged applause and was vociferously acclaimed at frequent intervals during his address. He spoke of the pleasure which the privilege of speaking to the ladies and gentlemen of Charleston accorded him and told of the cordiality and warmth with which he had been received at all places in the First district during the present campaign.

In answering Mr. Morrison's remarks in regard to the farmers and the representation which they had received in Congress, Mr. Logan said he had always considered the farmers in Congress and had worked untiringly for their welfare and betterment. He said that he had raised his voice for the rich and the poor, the humble and the strong and had always worked alongside all the people in their behalf.

Referring to the Santee bridge, Mr. Logan stated that $800,000 would be required to pay for the construction of this structure, $400,000 to be paid by the national government and $400,000 to be paid by the counties of Williamsburg, Berkeley and Charleston, saying that three-fourths of the amount to be paid by the three counties would come from the taxes of Charleston.

He told of instances in which friends and acquaintances of Mr. Hutto and Mr. Morrison had told him that while they considered these gentlemen to be good men, they did not consider them to be qualified to represent the First district in Congress.

Mr. Logan said that he had served in Congress the only master which a public man should serve—the people—and that no person from the First district had called upon him for assistance that did not receive it. He said that his experience which he had gained in Congress had qualified him to better serve the people and that he was sure that the people would recognize this and send him back to Washington as their representative.—News and Courier.
