

NAPOLEON TO JOSEPHINE.

From the first Josephine was a heart-breaker. In girlhood she had one or two love affairs in Martinique. Then, while still in her teens, she married Viscomte Beauharnais. The union was not happy. Her husband was beheaded during the French Revolution and she only escaped through winning the heart of the all powerful Barras.

Josephine was 32 years of age when she met the young Corsican officer, Napoleon Bonaparte. She was the foremost love of his life. He adored her from the moment they met. She cared little for him, for there was little about him to attract women. But Barras told her the young Corsican had every prospect of a great career, so with Barras as go between the marriage was arranged. Bonaparte at the time was compelled to be away from Josephine frequently and for long periods, but no lovesick swain ever wrote more fervent love notes than the man who all but conquered the world.

Undoubtedly to the woman he married and later divorced for ambition's sake he gave all the passion of his life. Three months before their marriage Napoleon wrote to Josephine as follows:

"I awakened this morning filled with thoughts of you. Sweet and incomparable Josephine, what a strange spell have you cast over my heart? When you are annoyed, or I see you sad and anxious, my heart is bruised with sorrow, and there is no rest for your lover, but is there more for me, when giving way to the deep feeling which masters me, I place on your lips, on your heart, a flame which burns me? You leave at noon; I shall see you in three hours. Till then, moi douce amour, a thousand kisses, but don't give me any, for they inflame my blood."

This was to Josephine, the betrothed. Five days after their marriage, when Napoleon was compelled to leave her because of war's demands, he wrote her from Chateau, March 14, 1796:

"Each instant separates me further from you, adorable one, and at each instant, I feel that I have less power to bear being separated from you. You are the perpetual object of my thoughts. * Write to me, my tender love, and receive the thousand one kisses from the truest and tenderest of friends."

Napoleon was ever jealous of Josephine and her letters to him were never full of the fire that his disposition demanded. He became frequently piqued and this is shown early in their marriage, as early as one month following, when he wrote her: "The fear of not being beloved by Josephine, the idea of seeing her inconstant, of her being—but I am making suffering for myself. There is so much that is real; must one manufacture more? You cannot have inspired a boundless love in me without sharing it, and with your soul, your mind, and your intelligence, you could not give in return for utter devotion, a death blow."

When Napoleon was absent in Egypt campaigning he heard that Josephine captured the heart of Mr. Charles, a military dandy. In jealous fury he rushed back to Paris, swearing he would divorce her. Josephine wept and declared her innocence and she was forgiven. But never again did Napoleon love Josephine as before.

In spite of her silly, insincere mind Josephine loved Napoleon, and when she died on May 24, 1814, her very last thoughts were for the ambitious man who had broken her heart. He had divorced her, seeking to strengthen his position by a more advantageous marriage—with Marie Louise of Austria. But he gave her an allowance of $400,000 a year and let press, but oddly enough Napoleon Bonaparte's star began to set from the moment he divorced Josephine.

CAROLINA MILLING COMPANY

We wish to announce that on July the first our lease expires on the Liberty Tobacco Warehouse. All persons holding cotton warehouse receipts issued by Mr. D. V. Hamilton are requested to present them for cancellation by that date. We have arranged with the new cotton warehouse to take over any cotton parties wish to store at a rate of fifty cents a bale per month. There will be no charge for transferring the cotton from the tobacco warehouse to the new cotton warehouse. Any parties not wishing to store cotton after July the first will please make sale of the cotton or take charge of it if they do not wish to store as above.

We urge all parties expecting to plant sweet potatoes for storage to prepare and fertilize the land at once. Potatoes should be set and growing by July the first if they are to be mature by the frost date. If possible secure Porto Rico plants before it rains to set your entire crop.

We buy Fulghum Seed Oats. If you have any to offer bring us a sample and we will name a cash price.

Buy from your merchant products made by the Carolina Milling Company and in that way patronize a local industry. We especially ask that you try our flour. It is equal to the best and will please you.
