Religion in the Workshops. The Presbyterian department of church and labor is about to begin a series of regular Sunday religious services in shops and factories throughout the United States, says the Chicago Tribune. Superintendent Charles Stejka of the Chicago office will direct the movement through representatives appointed in 250 centers, who in turn will lead the men in the territory which has been assigned to them.

A Song of Golden Leaves. How the wind is tossing the leaves of autumn down! To make the trees give up their gold—'I'd had a good town. The children's eyes would open wide; you'd see 'em stand an' stare. I'd hire a flyin' railroad train an' ride 'em to the fair. When I see the trees give all they've got to make the land look new. It's like a lesson to the rich; it tells 'em what to do. There's eyes enough would brighten at the twinkle of their gold. An' they'd git more joy an' blissin' than the arms of them could hold. So I'm wishin' we could coin all the autumn's gold an' make Warm fireplaces in sad homes for little children's sake. Pale cheeks would then be rosy; we'd git 'em everywhere. An' pile 'em in a railroad train an' ride 'em to the fair. —Atlanta Constitution.

TO STUDY THE PYGMIES

Purpose of Prof. Starr's Expedition into the Wilds of Africa.

Professor Frederick Starr, the enthusiastic anthropologist of Chicago university, sailed from New York the other day for Africa on what is thought to be one of the most important ethnological expeditions of recent years, his special mission being a year's sojourn in the wilds of the central African jungle to investigate the habits, customs, etc., of the pygmies, the yellow men and the cannibals that the remarkable black hillpunks of Africa form one of the enigmas of the dark continent. Professor Starr hopes to throw new light upon their origin and ancestry by making a series of plaster casts, physical measurements, photographic records, moving pictures and hundreds of photographic negatives of them. For this purpose he takes with him an expert young Mexican photographer, Manuel Gonzalez.

When asked for an outline of his plans, Professor Starr said: "I shall study the little Batwa pygmies and camp with them in their forest retreats. The pygmies are in no sense apish, as popularly supposed. The result of my investigations will, no doubt, go far to prove that they have been an unchanged race from their creation and not a degenerate people. I shall also make an investigation of the strange yellow and copper hued race of Africans recently made known by Samuel Verner, the missionary scientist now in that country. He says that the traditions of these yellow men indicate no white ancestry. They have a traditional testimony of an unaltered descent for hundreds of years. They are superior in handicraft and culture to the native blacks and do not like to marry dark women.

"There are about as many of these yellow men in Africa as there are negroes in the United States. They are scattered through many different tribes. It is believed that they are the last survivors of a migration of peoples centuries ago into Africa from the region of the Nile and the Red Sea. Mr. Verner's preliminary account, both of the Batwa pygmies and the yellow negroes, practically an unknown race of mankind, has awakened a widespread desire among scientists for a more extended knowledge in regard to them, which can only come from careful and prolonged research, such as I propose making. The field is a rare and fascinating one for the ethnologist. The results may open up a new chapter of life on the dark continent."

Professor Starr's headquarters will be 1,100 miles in the interior, at Ndombé, in the Belgian Congo protectorate, the capital city of King Ndombe, who will aid him in carrying out his investigations. Large bands of the Batwa pygmies live in his territory. They pay him tribute by furnishing meat and game to supply his large household. King Ndombe is of a copper color, over six feet six inches tall and of herculean build. He has a face expressive of kindly intelligence and a searching pair of brown eyes, each said to be as large as a quarter of a dollar. King Ndombe's domain is about as large as the state of New Jersey and contains some 100,000 inhabitants. The king is credited with possessing thirty-one wives and forty children. A band of some 200 pygmies lives on the edge of King Ndombe's town. They dwell in beehive-like huts, formed of bent sticks covered with leaves and palm fibers, with an opening in the bottom just large enough for them to crawl through. The inside would be about the size of two good sized dry goods boxes. This cramped place should stand erect or lie at full length in one of these structures. The more primitive pygmies are to be found far in the forest interior, where the tree dwelling tribes exist. Here cannibalism is met with, and some more or less dangerous and thrilling experiences may result. With pygmy guides and armed native attendants Professor Starr will pitch camp and, carry on his observations within range of the deadly poisoned arrows of the tree-hiding dwarfs, not yet introduced to white men.

Samuel Verner, now awaiting Professor Starr's arrival to introduce him to King Ndombe, and who was for many months practicing a next door neighbor to the little black dwarfs, says the entire life of the little people is given up to hunting and fishing. They never till the soil or become agriculturists. Their principal weapon is the primitive bow, with poisoned arrows. The pygmies are often shorter than their bows. The poison they use is one of the most fatal known. It will cause death in from two to five minutes. Sometimes, if inflicted upon a person, will cause insanity. A light scratch is sufficient to produce madness, and finally death by convulsions in about two weeks. There is no antidote yet discovered for this poison. Many a pygmy hunter is so expert that at seventy-five feet he can send an arrow through a rat scampering full speed across the ground. Their sense of smell is as keen as a dog's, and much of their game is discovered through the medium of the nose. Their peculiar species of diminutive dog does not bark, so a string of wooden bells is fastened about its neck to indicate its whereabouts while hunting.

The average height of the Batwa pygmy adult is about four feet, a few measuring four feet four. Many, however, are less than four feet. The women are a trifle shorter than the men. As a rule, a man has only one wife. They do not intermarry with the larger Africans, though living side by side; neither do they adopt their customs. The little people are sun-worshippers. Their language is peculiar. The words denoting animals, for instance, are derived from sounds made by the beasts they describe. Elephant is "huh-ha, huh-ha, huh-ha," snake is "huh-ha-wih-ha." The last has a rattling sound when pronounced, imitative of the rattle wriggling over leaves. Their vocabulary is limited. A special effort will be made by Professor Starr to get a full version of their odd phraseology on the phonograph. A language primer of the pygmies will be a novelty.

"History records their existence for 5,000 years. They were mentioned by Herodotus. Some scientists think they were the aborigines of Africa and exclusively occupied in the remote past that vast territory, but a larger people invaded their domain, waged war upon them and drove them to the depths of the forest."

"ROAST YOUR GERMS."

Chicago Physician Tells Why "Bugs" Should Be Cooked. "Roast your germs." This is the autumn rule of health which you must observe unless you wish to have an irritating throat cough throughout the breezy October and November days, according to Dr. Heman Spaulding, chief medical inspector of the city health department of Chicago. It appears, according to Dr. Spaulding, that a thorough, long, insistent roasting is guaranteed to make the worst "bad man" among the germs a harmless individual of the mildest nature, says the Chicago Record-Herald. But an unroasted germ is worse than a reckless chauffeur.

The germs to which Dr. Spaulding refers are those which have gathered in the dark recesses of the furnaces during the summer months, and he declares the heat registers should not be opened until the germs have been roasted to a crisp brown.

"Before the registers are opened," said the doctor the other day, "the heat should be turned on and allowed to roast the germs and foreign material in the pipes. The heat will destroy the germs and prevent them from entering the rooms."

If the germs are not roasted they will mingle in the atmosphere, boosting their full virility, and will cause throat coughs of varying degrees of irritation. The principal germs are of the staphylococcus and streptococcus varieties. If they are not roasted they are as bad as any animal.

A Disastrous Calamity. It is a disastrous calamity, when you lose your health, because indigestion and constipation have sapped it away. Prompt relief can be had in Dr. King's New Life Pills. They build up your digestive organs and cure headache, dizziness, colic, constipation, etc. Guaranteed at all drug stores. 25c.

JOLLY ORDER OF CARABAO.

Enemies of Thirst in Army and Navy Organize in Philippines. If you happen to see an officer of the United States army or the navy carrying a short, slender black stick you may know that he is a Carabao, says the Washington Post.

Now, the carabao is the water buffalo of the orient and especially of the Philippines. The animal is so important in the islands that when some American officers who had seen service in the Philippines were casting about for a name suitable to an order formed among themselves they hit upon this Spanish name of the water buffalo.

So the Order of the Carabao is plain English for society of the water buffalo. This society was formed not gravely, but in sport. All the officers have absurd and high sounding titles in a sort of bastard Spanish, and the dolings of the society are wholly frivolous.

In one particular the Order of the Carabao imitates its namesake. The water buffalo is upon all ordinary occasions docile and gentle, but when the madness of thirst seizes the beast, which it does very frequently, all else is neglected until the thirst of the moment is quenched, and woe betide the person or thing encountering the rush of the herd for water.

It is so with the Order of the Carabao. When the members, few or many, are assembled and engaged in whatever talk or business, at the agreed thirst signal all else is laid aside until every Carabao has the wherewithal to quench his thirst.

It is only in rare instances that water is the fluid chosen for this purpose. The haste and unanimity with which the assembled members of the order break off in the midst of whatever business or pleasure may engage them to respond to the thirst signal is a sight to move the mirth and amazement of the casual stranger.

The distinguishing mark of the order is the short, slender black stick. The stick is made of a piece of the water buffalo's horn. Upon the end of the little silver head appears the effigy of the animal itself, and on the side of the head are engraved the initials of the owner and his number in the Order of the Carabao.

This little wand is intended for neither offense nor defense. It is, in fact, the equivalent of the swagger stick carried by many British officers. This is often as not a light riding stick, and it is intended more than anything else to give employment to the hands, so that they shall not find their way into the pockets.

WHAT IS ROMAN FOR 1905?

Congress, Divided Between MDCCLCV and MCMV, Wants to Know. A classical quandary will be debated in the house of representatives this winter which will draw out the academic accomplishments of a score of members, says a Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Public Ledger. Carrere & Hastings, the architects of the house office building, have had cut in the cornerstone of that structure in one long and very plain line the letters "MDCCLCV" to tell to this and all coming generations that the great building was erected in the present year of grace. Already a discussion has started among leading officials and government architects as to the correctness of the inscription.

It is urged that it should be "MCMV." Those who have had the temerity to suggest that it should be plainly "1905" have been told that they had no soul for the artistic, and such an inscription has from the start had no chance whatever. Carrere & Hastings insist that they have the Roman way of saying 1905 down because it is written in this way on the New York Public Library. In the case of that general li-while matter was finally submitted to professors at Yale and Harvard and the French Institute. As opposed to this the point has been raised that on the face of the Roman sundial the hour of four is never written "IIII," nor, in fact, are four letters ever used to produce a numeral in Roman method. It is claimed that as long as 19 is indicated by the letter "XIX" and 100 is indicated by the letters "CXC" there is no logical reason for changing the form when indicating 100 times 10 or 10 times 100.
