SOCIAL LIFE IN PACKINGTOWN

Outside Of Boarding-House Groups There Is No Community Interest There

SETTLEMENT OPPORTUNITIES

In a visit to the two packing plants in Oklahoma City, I discovered that there are between thirteen and fourteen hundred men employed by the Morris & Co. and S. and S. plants. Of these men, less than one-third live in Packingtown or adjoining parts of the city. The majority of those who live in Packingtown put up at cheap rooming houses and hotels.

I had expected to see numerous small cottages near so large an industrial center, but these were very, very few. Morris & Co. have a few four and five-room cottages, which they rent through an agent, and this is the only step which has been taken toward creating an industrial community in Packingtown.

Both Morris and S. and S. employ mostly unskilled laborers, and pay them from 17 to 25 cents an hour. The ordinary working day is from 8 a. m. to 5:30 p. m. After the day's work is over the men who do not live in Packingtown have to ride back to their homes on the cars, and those who live in Packingtown have to ride all the way to town for any amusements, for there is not even a movie show in Packingtown.

"We are too busy running a packing plant," said Mr. E. K. Slack, manager for the S. and S. offices, "to know or care about every laborer who works in our plant. We are through with him when his work is done."

Mr. Slack told me that the company kept no record of the addresses of its employees.

"There is no field for community interest in Packingtown," he said. "The laborers who work out here are mostly transient. They do not like to keep moving, so it wouldn't pay packing plants to spend time in organizing a community here."

At the Morris plant there is a lunch room for employees which is conducted on the actual cost plan. "An employee can get a substantial lunch at the lunch room for 10 or 15 cents," said Mr. E. B. McKillip, manager of the Morris offices; "and we find that it is good business to see that our employees are well fed."

"Does the company have any organization of its employees?" I asked.

"We have instituted a protective association among the men," he informed me. "Each employee contrib-

CRIPPLED WHILE STEALING RIDE

Youth Is Suing Katy for $10,000 Because He Alleges, Brakeman Kicked Him Off Freight Train

A boy stretched on a cot, his face pale and drawn and his left hand with three fingers missing, is a feature in a trial progressing today in Judge O'Haffield's division of the district court. The boy is C. H. Smith of Ault, Colo., and he is suing the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway company for $10,000.

Young Smith was tramping over the country when he received the injuries that resulted in the loss of his fingers and made him a cripple for life. He was even attempting to steal a ride on an oil tank car of the defendant railroad at the time. The suit is brought through W. F. Smith, his father, as next friend, the boy himself being only 17 years old.

The youth was traveling over the country by way of the box car route and at Norfolk, Okla., on March 6 of this year boarded the tank car of a northbound train. The train was moving at the rate of about four or five miles an hour, it is alleged in the petition, and the car he boarded was the eighth or ninth back from the engine.

Young Smith caught the step that extends down from the platform or running board of the car and was safely upon it, he alleges, when a brakeman standing on the running board put his foot against his shoulder and gave him a shove. He was thrown off and rolled upon the ground. He fell with his left hand upon the rail, after rolling over a number of times, and his hand was crushed. He was cut and bruised about the face and stitches had to be taken in his lips.

The defense is that the youth was a trespasser upon the property of the railroad company, but attorneys for the plaintiff say there have been numerous cases of the same character in the courts before and recovery has been given. Had the boy fallen off would have no valid claim for damages, it is admitted, but the act of the company's employe made a suit possible.

AS LITIGANT SULLIVAN IS BULLDOG RIGHT

With the same bulldog tenacity that has marked his fight ever since the present litigation started, P. M. Sullivan is holding on in the effort to reopen the case in which he is the defendant and Robert H. Hirsch is the plaintiff, involving farm land in this state which is claimed by Sullivan.

Today Sullivan filed in the district court a motion for the election of a special judge by the members of the bar to try the issues in the case. He states that the district judges have all disqualified themselves.
