CAMPAIGN ISSUES.

WASHINGTON dispatches announce that President Wilson is convinced the peace treaty will be the big issue of this year's political campaign. Should ratification fail, the treaty must inevitably be a factor in determining the election result. But under no circumstances will it be the only issue. It is doubtful that any circumstances can even make it the dominant issue. No other matter is of such far-reaching importance for the future of the nation and the world. The greatest hope for guaranteeing against future wars deserves serious consideration. To restrict the freedom of nations or cripple its usefulness is to slow the march of progress and continue the heavy burden of competitive armament. But there are immediate needs which overshadow even that momentous document, conditions which strike nearer home and now, certainties against hopes and possibilities.

Failure to reduce the cost of living will be charged against both parties. Both are guilty to some degree, but more may be charged to the republican congress than to the democratic administration. Attorney General Talbot has erred in promising too much. Perhaps his efforts to punish profiteers are feeble, but all investigations show profiteering is but a minor influence in the upward trend. But the republican congress also promised much and has done nothing. It has power to do more than any executive department can accomplish. Expert financiers, including Frank Vanderlip, among the nation's ablest, point to tax reduction and revision as essential to increased business. Reginald McKenna, chairman of the London Joint City and Midland bank, and former chancellor of the British exchequer, sees somewhat similar conditions in Great Britain.

But expert advice means less than political expediency to many congressmen to whom nothing is so important as the fall elections. League wrangles and timidity make this something of a do-nothing congress. Railway legislation was delayed until the last moment and was practically forced by the action of a democratic president in fixing the date of returning the roads to private management. The tendency is to let everything else wait as long as possible for fear of giving political offense. There is slight prospect of the needed tax relief before the November election.

Greater co-operation in church work should result from the Inter-Church World movement, of which the conversion of churchmen and women here this week is a part. Churches are awakening to the fact that there has been too much division of their efforts in the past. Too many creeds and too often antagonistic because of trifling differences of ritual or dogma have handicapped church work in many places. These will not be overcome nor perfect unity of Christian denominations attained by this movement, but it is something that they have learned to work together.

The recent cold wave is said to have damaged the wheat crop, but a number of other calamities will betell that cereal between now and harvest time.

THE PRICE OF OIL.

The price of oil averages today. The public wills assume from time to time. And then with a sudden lurch they play. Till dollars seem no larger than a dime.

This reads part from some so high. That you will say you are heard and keep. And suppose you are the lucky one. Who has a son to take while for a sheep.

Old Mafes seems a piker into these. When disputes are at the proper end of said. From which the black and greasy substance flows. And flows but a little, you understand.

The golden days of '29 are pale. In view of late quotations of the crude—A slow and dreary stream of slipping fate. He took and put to mountain solitude.

But only streams stopped in Texas street. Permeate as quickly, though we deny them. And wash for us in low of a nation's fate. Or deck our brow with diamond shades.

Not do resolute likes of gasoline. Impel a quaking of our home grown teeth. Because we wish to show our brains. In which along the pipe to swirl and seeth.

But such a price it seems to increase. The crowd of agents but to catch our eye. By selling what is which name it says the price. Or those who bid a lot in their own way.

Then Master proposes a plate which will be across the country from coast to coast in full of what the price is. Heedless, one guess is as good as another. He says he has, and the price that in such level record is going to be attained by anything which might possibly carry Mr. Borah's mail.

There are also sensitive souls who seem to be looking for opportunities to be insulted.

Men see such an occasion but that it is difficult to understand the member who is so anxious to get her daughters married that she makes that achievement for her work.

When the matrimonial cake falls and a woman begins talking of Living Her Own Life, there is some curiosity to know what she means.

Howard Figg is going to probe shoe prices, and with anything as large as that, there should be a great deal to find out.

A boy is the economic creature who will run three blocks to get to ride one.

Impossible. Some of it is possible. They require to wear. They need and must carry. All prices will compare. With thousand other seasons. And they compare the laugh. But there are better reasons. Why this cannot be so.

The mail who manipulates the laundry telephone and courts an uncertain more during her spare moments, para the people say, saying the lost articles were new, but on our calling list are those who have said much more than that without accomplishing anything other than a strain on addresses and inactivity. Cleanliness is next to godliness, and all that sort of thing and laundry prices are high enough to make that proverb concerning, and far be it from us to be highly sensible with those who make our collar's edge that way. However, back in the days before silk shirts became sartorial necessities, clean laundry was desirable before taking a train out of San Francisco to grab a job that couldn't wait. The laundressman promised to deliver at an hour to suit the fastest, but didn't, and our supply of shirts and faith in human nature has never been quite the same since.

Now that hubbub is on the market, there is an increased demand for a water-proof pie crust.

Such things weren't mentioned much before importing that French word, lingerie.

Dear Editor:

Well Ed, here I am again upon your bad page and the reason I have not been hating you some letters recent is on account of myself going a couple rounds with the flu or something and being tender braced de combat and put more or less upon a shelf and eating practical nothing and very little of that.

This flu is not by no means a joke and will attack on a man when you are not looking and the first thing a person knows he will probably have a temperature so high it can be took only by a bird which uses a step ladder.

In the first place I'd while a man has a fever he is sick with a pain and they is no food which looks good enough to be eat and a man wants to drink all the time and all they will leave you have is water or maybe milk. After a while they manage to chase out the fever and by a couple days a fellow probably feels pretty good and says Ed I will look at myself at the table and surround a steak and some potatoes and a piece of cherry pie and eat and in about 24 hours a person will put a tray over next to yourself and they will be not eat upon it making only a sort of egg and some toast and tea with no strength in it and I claim that is a fine way to use a man which is trying to do a cardiovascular or something.

If I had time Ed I would start a humanitarian union of the victims and organize local chapters and yards and etc. and have the members get together each other week and exchange their experiences and try to find out which one had it the most and also organize and I would have the local set of the union could call in a book of specialists or something and run this flu germ into a hole and isolate it and work out a serum which would get a decision over the germ in the next round.

At that Ed, they would not be nothing else in this flu man on account of practical experience in the world being a chapter member that they would probably be a lot of competition to see which was to be winners and before anyone else thinks of it I would like to put in a bid for Grand High Butler of the League. I can find this job Ed I will be fixed better than some of our well known prior duties.
