OUR LONDON LETTER.

AN INTERESTING LETTER ON ENGLISH POLITICS.

The House of Commons-Ashamed-Burdett-Counts-Bartlett as a Speaker-The Indian and Egyptian Questions-A Man From Texas.

Special correspondence of the Gazette.
London, August 23.-There is a decided lull in English politics just now. Parliament is still in session pretending to work, but very little of general or even of local interest is being accomplished. I attend the session about once every week but I am seldom repaid in pleasure for the trouble which my visits give me. Speaking at Chichester last night, Lord Henry Lennox said the present session had been one of disappointment, of fiasco, and of disaster. Perhaps he was right and then perhaps, on the other hand, he wasn't right. That the results of the session have been disappointing to almost every English politician, I can easily believe. For the reason though, that what has pleased the conservatives has naturally not pleased the liberals, and vice versa. We think that in Texas and in the United States generally we have pretty

LIVELY POLITICS.

But as a matter of fact we are a tame lot of politicians as compared with the English. Of course, once every two years we get our backs up and say and do a great many violent things, but on the whole we are a very conservative set of people in the matter of politics. We have so much else to think about and occupy our time that we make politics a sort of now and then pastime. But here what have the people to think of but governmental matters and fetes? I refer of course to the upper circles, who don't have to worry their brains with such questions as "Where is to-morrow's bread to come from?" The poor have no time to devote to any other question I fancy than this single one of where the "grub" is to come from; but in England, as almost everywhere else,

"THE POOR DON'T COUNT."

In the United States we have a thousand things to interest us, as for instance railroad building, the building of new towns and cities, the development of new industries, and other things all looking to a still more prosperous future for the country. But there are no railroads to build here, no new industries to look after, "no nothing" in fact, by day, and only fun and frolic by night. Hence it is that everybody, who is anybody (here too, I remark, by way of parenthesis, "the poor don't count") watches what parliament is doing. I believe I wrote you all about the ministry and the Suez Canal prospect, and ventured to predict that unless the ministry recovered in some way the ground lost in that unfortunate affair, it would have "to go." But

SIR STAFFORD NORTHCOTE.

The leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, jumped too soon to the conclusion that he had his game run down, and "got left" when he asked for a vote which practically would have been a vote of censure on the ministry. By this ill-timed haste he lost the advantage he and his party had gained to that time. Mr. Gladstone is a cunning old fox, and in the matter of doubling on his tracks he is "chain-lightning"-as a Westerner would say. So when he saw Sir Stafford had lost the track he doubled right back to the starting point and stayed there. In other words he dropped M. de Lesseps, and the canal business like they were hot bricks, and left his opponent with nothing to say. You have heard of the little boy whom the bull butted off the bridge. It is the same bull and little boy. The Premier has been posing in the former part and the opposition leader in the latter, and now "the little boy" is under the bridge.

EATING HUMBLE PIE.

In other words the ministry is "solid" again and parliament is going to dissolve itself without a change of ministers. Last evening there was a little revival meeting in the commons. Did you know that a gentleman from the states was one of the most conspicuous persons in the commons? He is better known here as the husband of Baroness Burdett-Counts, but his real name is

ASHMEAD BARTLETT.

You see the Baroness was an old maid with a big bank account and Mr. Bartlett was over here hunting for just such a combination or rather he was after the latter (and to him) the better half of this combination, and really didn't care a fig, I suppose, about the former half. I apprehend it would have been all the same to him if there hadn't been any former half, if he still could have secured the former and perhaps a little more so. However, there was both a former half and a latter half, and as he had to take both he did so with good grace. I don't know how many millions of shillings he got in the transaction, but I do know that his better half has the finest diamonds, the finest laces and the finest of everything that goes to make life endurable in certain circles over here. Or rather "they say so," and of course from such a divina I would not think of venturing an appeal. But I started in to tell you that this same Mr. Bartlett is an American. It isn't quite certain, but I judged he belongs to either but he puts in his looks pretty often, nominally in the interest of the opposition. He jumps astride of even the premier on such occasions, and if he doesn't kick in the old man's ribs it is not the fault of

"THE GENTLEMAN FROM AMERICA."

I presume it is needless for me to mention that Mr. Gladstone don't often seem to know that any such person has sinister designs on his bones, but nevertheless the kicking goes on "all the same." I once heard of an irate mother who about midnight was abusing her "worse half" because he wouldn't spank the baby-a poor little mope-believe of a child that was "raising old Cain" in spite of walking and coddling and other such endearments on the part of the indulgent male animal of the family. The old man didn't reply for a while, but at length he slowly and deliberately placed the "make believe" in that position across his knees, which is supposed to be the proper one for a bad child to be in when being spanked. He then elevates his linen, and, with hands aloft, was apparently about to do murder-or the next thing to it-in that family. For a full minute his said hand remained elevated in mid air, then it slowly hunted a more natural position at his side, and as his eyes sought those of his spouse, still in bed, he said, by way of explanation: "Really, old woman, I would spank this young one, but I'll swear to gracious, I can't find a big enough place to spank." Wonder if that is why Mr. Ashmead Bartlett never gets spanked by the premier? Possibly so; but whatever be the true cause, the fact is that in spite of his often repeated attempts to secure such attention, he never-or hardly ever, succeeds. The engineer in charge of the ministerial ship don't seem to know that the young man is really mad, but appears to indulge in the idea that he is only "funning with his torpedoes."

Maybe I ought not to write so affectionately (?) of my countryman, but the fact is, he is emphatically the young-man-who-talks-too-much-with his-mouth, and it is very, very rare that he even receives or deserves, an expression of approbation from any of the leading papers of London. To-day, though, the Telegraph, referring to a speech made by him last night as to the controversy has only an indirect connection with revenue accounts but they presented the occasion for a weighty arraignment of and Mr. Ashmead Bartlett was amply justified in seizing it to place the comprehensive and vital issue it involves before the house of commons. He did so in a speech of striking ability, cogency and eloquence." Here follow extracts from the speech, but as Texans feel no interest in Lord Ripon's pet scheme, I will not quote them. Really Mr. Bartlett is a fair speaker and is not wanting any more in brains than in assurance, but he is sadly wanting in that prudence which is said to be the better part of valor" and would be more respected and more felt in the commons and in the country if he wasn't everlastingly "shoot-ing off his mouth" about matters that are not worth a speech. The gentleman, though, is still young, even if he is the husband of a lady now somewhat advanced in years, and he may learn better as he grows older. Naturally I feel an interest in him and in his career here as a politician, but I apprehend that if his friends and admirers hope that he will figure as respectfully in English politics as his American contemporary, Mr. Benjamin, figured in English courts, it will be another case of "hope deferred," which we are told "makes the heart sick." The gentleman from New York is not likely to succeed in making English laws as well as did the gentleman from Louisiana in construing and interpreting them.

THE INDIAN QUESTION.

Is one about which there isn't anything like a unanimity of opinion over here. The friends of Lord Ripon's Indian policy on the one hand, and its opponents on the other hand, have been both active and aggressive, and first one and then the other has had "an expression from the people." Mass meetings assembled, until a stranger can't tell for the life of him which is the popular and which the unpopular side. To-day a meeting "representing the intelligence, patriotism and capital of England," may resolve that Lord Ripon is wrong, but if so, the champions are ten to one, that to-morrow another meeting, claiming to represent the same forces of England, will resolve that he is right. Just such a curious see-saw game has been kept up here for weeks past, and still unsettled who is wrong and who is right. If it is true that vox populi, vox Dei, then vox Dei is a very contradictory sort of voice over here, since the rule in this matter is to say one thing to-day and the very opposite to-morrow. I may be permitted to mention in this connection that is about in the same fix. One side here says "the army of occupation in Egypt must be ordered home," while the other side says they "must be kept where they are." I think Mr. Gladstone would be sorry if he could obey stone orders, but since he can't, he will have to nothing, which means, of course, that the army may stay in Egypt, for the present at least. So much had been said in certain quarters recently in favor of this do-nothing policy that I had about concluded this was the popular side, but night before last I went to the Drury-Lane theatre to see the play called and had to change my mind. This play, (which, by the by, considered from a spectacular standpoint, is a good success) based on the idea of the English occupation of Egypt, Mahomed Arabi Bey, is one of the leading characters, representing the Egyptian side of the question, has occasion to denounce the English policy that results in his country being over run by British soldiers, and to my surprise the sentiment was applauded to the echo vociferously. If the crowd there assembled expressed the voice of the people, then the people don't approve of the ministry's policy. Just here I will "let up" on politics for a minute, to mention that the most attractive character in this play is

"A MAN FROM TEXAS."

Andrew Jackson Stessby by name, from "Slingsbyville, Texas," who having infinite resources at his command always manages to be on hand when parties are in trouble, ready and able to extricate them. Of course, he is made to sing his "alf-a-dollars" round losses and all that, and his "little pistol" is made to do noble service and all that, and he is as rough as the bark on a hickory tree and all that, but all the same he is the man who did about everything done that was worth applauding. Hence it was that before I left the theatre I sent him my card, on the reverse side of which appeared in hieroglyphical characters the old-fashioned legend running thus: "S-h-a-k-e." H. L. B.

NEW YORK.

Pugilistic Paragraphs-This Coming Drinker-Sullivan Ready to Meet Mace in the Ring.

Special to the Gazette.
New York, September 14.-Jim Kelly, the pugilist, who says he has fought seventeen hard-fought fights and has never yet been worsted, said that he knew that there was a rod in pickle for Sullivan, and that Mace was the man who would manage the affair. He says that Mace had now in hand a man who it is thought would before long make a big name. His name is Bavin, and he hails from Birmingham, Eng. He weighs 185 pounds, is tall, raw boned and a perfect terror in a fight. His method is equally as quick and forcible as Sullivan's. He whipped Donovan easily, some time ago. Sullivan found difficulty in stopping Donovan. When J. L. Sullivan was called upon in relation to the meeting which he said is being arranged between him and Jim Mace, the champion said: "If Jim Mace or any other man wants to spar with me, he knows where to find me. I am a business man and have a regular place of business. I think there is a great deal of humbug in this newspaper talk about fighting, and I don't propose to allow any man to make money or reputation at my expense if I can help it." Sullivan's intimate friends are confident that there will soon be a meeting at Madison Square, New York, between Sullivan and Mace. Mace wants to arrange for a simple exhibition, but Sullivan will never agree to that. He will go in to win, and if that Gipsy faces him he must prepare for hard knocks.

MORGAN.

Bob Terrell Convicted and sentenced-Other Court Items-Local and Personal News.

Special to the Gazette.
Morgan, September 14.-Bob Terrell, the noted cattle thief, was brought to Meridian this week from Cleburne, to be tried on a charge of stealing a yearling in this county. The jury gave him two years in the penitentiary.

Jeff Hooter, charged with theft of a horse, was tried at Meridian yesterday and acquitted.

To-day is the day set for the trial of Deputy Sheriff John White, for the killing of Cavanaugh. Good counsel has been procured on both sides of this case, and much interest is manifested in it by the people of Morgan, as Mr. White is a resident of this town and has many friends here.

The Irrebell Bee made its first appearance Wednesday. It is a neat twenty-four column paper, and reflects much credit upon its editor and the thriving little city it represents.

Mr. L. E. Moss, having bought the interest of Mr. Carson in the Bank saloon at this place, is now sole proprietor. Messrs. Sloan and Ferguson are the gentlemanly bar-tenders at that saloon.

A protracted meeting is now in progress at the Baptist church, which is to continue for two weeks if enough interest is taken in the matter by the people of our town.

The dry goods house of M. & B. Miller is now filled with the largest and best selected stock of goods in Besque county.

Mr. O. C. McPhail is now behind the counter of our energetic groceryman, T. F. Lockett.

Among the number one business enterprises in Morgan is the Riggins' hardware company. This firm has been doing business in here ever since Morgan has been a town of any importance. They have contributed to everything to make Morgan a success, and are now doing the most extensive hardware business in this portion of the country.

SAN ANTONIO.

Bohemian Beer Bibbers-Mrs. Dan Smith Robbed-Fort Worth Frauds Go Astray-A Feath.

Special to the Gazette.
San Antonio, September 14.-Two local reporters undertook to outvie one another this morning by each drinking a quarter-gallon mug of beer. Both succeeded but what happened afterwards wouldn't do to tell, inasmuch as they have requested names to be kept out of the papers, which journalistic courtesy forces us to respect.

Mrs. Dan Smith, of eloquent notoriety, makes complaint to-day that she was robbed last night of a silk dress $200 in money, a gold watch and chain, etc, which brings her down to bed rock, as her husband, children and property have been taken from her by fiat of the court.

C. W. Morrill to-day received drafts for $5,500 from the Fort Worth National bank. The drafts were for C. W. "Merrill." Had Mr. Morrill been dishonestly disposed he could have collected the drafts. The mistake is due to the incompetency and carelessness of our post office.

Col. J. S. Sellers, formerly a prominent Galveston merchant, and who for the past two years has been agent of the Sun-et railway between this city and Houston, died here at noon to-day. His wife died last spring, and his daughter, Mrs. Young, wife of Dr. Young of the Houston Post, last July. Col. Sellers leaves two young daughters and a son to mourn his loss.

It is reported here that a great public fire is raging in Erie county, and that the Lewis Bro.'s pasture in Zavala county has been burned off.

THE YELLOW FEVER.

History of the Disease on the Naval Reservation Near Pensacola.

Washington, D. C., September 14.-Following is a general summary of the disease since its first appearance at the reservation on the 16th of August last. The navy yard is situated on Tartar Point, a point of land on the northern shore, about two miles east of the entrance of Pensacola bay, and eight miles west of the city of Pensacola. The navy yard proper is about half a mile square and enclosed in rectangular walls, inside of which are the government buildings, officers' quarters and marine barracks.

The villages of Woolsey and Warrington are situated, respectively, adjacent to the northern and western walls. The total population is about 1500. Of this number there were at the outbreak of the fever eight officers and thirty marines. The remainder are in the villages above named. Ten deaths have occurred in the navy yard proper. The marines have been removed to the northwestern confines of the reservation, and at this date are free from disease. At Warrington and Woolsey there have been to date 175 sick, 141 cases and 14 deaths, all of whom were white. This balance (12 deaths) were children, 13 of whom were white and two negroes. There were no deaths Sunday, but seven new cases were reported.

Dr. Mills is a practitioner and is aiding also as a druggist as well as sanitary inspector, and is doing good work. Much distress is reported as prevailing. The United States government officials are restricted from doing as much in the way of relief as should be done. Medicine and food are required to supply the sick and destitute.
