Woman's Incredulity.

JEFFERSON, TEX., Nov. 29. To the Editor of the Gazette.

In looking over a lot of papers last evening I read this startling announcement: "That no one would ever be elected to the presidency who put his clothes on over his head."

I mislaid the paper and do not remember whether it was a clipping from another paper or your own genuine discovery. Now, I being a woman, know that it is true that "Belva" does put her shirts on "over her head," and if the editor has any other way of getting into his I would like to be informed of the fact. Perhaps there may be some new way that the lords of creation have of donning their shirts instead of the old-fashioned way of going in head first; if so, and it has anything to do with being elected to the presidency, I would like to have him publish his way of getting into them for the benefit of all female candidates hereafter.

I am glad to know that the difficult question has been settled at last, that is, the election of our president. The Democrats claim to have elected him. Then come the Independent Republicans for their share of credit. Conkling, with his magnificent bangs, next puts in his claim for being the power that did the work; then Beecher, that pure, good man of Elizabeth Tilton fame, says he did it.

Now, it seems, there is a shirt mixed up in the business, and it is not Blaine's, either. Yours truly,
MARY MALONEY.

Turner & McClure have just received a nice shipment of specially fine goods, and more are booked to follow. It is their purpose to supply their customers with the best grade of staple and fancy groceries to be had in Eastern markets.
