IN THE EYES OF THE SOUTH.

Third Annual Reunion of the Ex-Confederates
a Success.

The Last Day Pronounced the Most Pleasant of all--The Crowd Not so Dense.

Stewart, Yeal, McKnight, Crawford,
Wylie, Wynne and Thurmond
Among the Speakers.

The Veterans all Go Home Charming With
Their Treatment and More Fondly
United Than Ever.

A STAR IN THE FORT'S RECORD.

GAZETTE BUREAU,
IN CAMP, Aug. 7.

Special in the Gazette.

The great reunion is over. For three days the encampment on the banks of the beautiful Clear Fork has presented a scene of massive activity, soldiers and citizens joining their efforts in making it the grandest occasion of the kind ever held in the South.

SIXTY THOUSAND PEOPLE of Waxahachie, the representative of the ex-Confederate Tennesseeans, was the next speaker, and aroused the greatest enthusiasm witnessed during the entire reunion. He said that although the Tennesseeans had put him forward to represent them, he knew no distinction between the soldiers of Tennessee and Georgia, Texas, Alabama or any other state. They were all animated by the same feelings.

Any soldier who did his duty was a great man, if he were no bigger than a pound of soap after a day's washing. Referring to the demise of the great federal general, the speaker said, that the man who could not weep over the troubles and the sufferings of Gen. Grant, did not hold that exalted position which

A JUNIOR RESEMBLES ALWAYS OCCUPIED.

Eulogies had been pronounced on Lee and Jackson and all our great generals, and now he proposed to show a sketch that surprised them all. Here the speaker raised an old army coat of a common soldier, worn and tattered—in fact, a bunch of rags. He pronounced a tragic lyric on the private soldier "who had nothing to fight for save his honor and his convictions of right." The man who filled that coat was the greatest hero of the war. [Prolonged applause.] He left the tender embraces of a loving mother, sister or wife impelled alone by a sense of duty. Whether he was victorious or whether he was not he was

AN HONEST MAN.

Touching the fraternal spirit inspired by these gatherings, Col. McKnight remarked that a gallant federal soldier had said to him yesterday that the time was coming when there would be no ex-Union or ex-Confederate reunions, but that instead we would have one grand reunion of all the survivors of the war. He recently paid a visit to his old Tennessee home and found everybody mourning for Grant. The ex-Confederates held a meeting with Gov. Tate in the chair, and gave expression to sentiments of the same friendly sentiment. The statement was emphasized that the effects of the meeting were social and not political.

THE WAR IS OVER.

The Confederate soldiers have said it, and it is so.

THE PARTING HOURS.

The attendance on Friday was hardly so large as yesterday, numbering perhaps 29,000 people. But it is no disparagement to previous days to say that this was the most pleasant of the occasion.

Among the veterans there was the solemnity of a parting close at hand, but which yet is not. The spectators entered into the exercises with a zest, not boisterous, but which evinced the liveliest interest.

The large local attendance was noticeable. Unusually good order prevailed and the slightest tones of the speakers were heard by the vast audience beneath the grand stand. Quite contrary to the usual order of things there was no diminution of interest to the last, and it is a satisfaction to know that the closing hour of the closing day was reached with general regard.

As to the issues of the reunion little remains to be said. There was no discord, no dissension; every speech breathed the same conservative tone, every utterance the same friendly sentiment. The statement was emphasized that the effects of the meeting were social and not political.
