RAISING THE WIND. An Alleged Atrocious Father and His Young Daughter Play a Sharp Game.

The Bush people, who attempted to do up Los Angeles a few months ago, have turned up in San Diego, where the supposed father of the girl is working the sympathy racket.

The girl is working the sympathy racket. In brief, their scheme is as follows: The two girls, who are diva actresses, go to a city and get an engagement.

After they have been in the city a few days the "father" puts in an appearance and a disgraceful row takes place at the theater.

The old man tells the most pitiful story to the officers, who are always somewhere around to interfere, just at the proper time.

He forces a few frozen tears into his eyes, and tells how his poor girls have been ruined by a disgraceful man and woman, who induced them to leave their innocent, little eastern home, and then ruined them.

The girls are perfectly willing to give up their occupation and return to the arms of their heart-broken parents, but they are afraid of the gang who led them astray.

The officers can do nothing, because the girls are of age, and the poor father is almost distracted.

The green newspapers take the matter up and do all in their power to create sympathy for the "poor father," who has stupefied the amateur reporters with a lot of rot about how he had to mortgage his little home back east to get money with which to save his loved ones from a life of shame.

The green "journalist," at the accent on the "g," picture a sick mother who is almost at the point of death from grief and starvation.

The cock-and-bull stories are gulped down by the sentimental cranks, and the alleged father has no trouble in raising the wind, or, in plain English, he relieves the sentimental gulls of their money in sums varying from $10 to $50 of $100.

As soon as the city is thoroughly worked the queer trio skip out, and nothing more is heard of them until they turn up in some other city, where the same performance is gone through with.

Some eight or nine months ago they appeared in this city, and a paper devoted column after column to the gang and did all in its power to create a sympathy for the "poor, half-crazed father," as they called him.

The Times exposed the scheme, and Bash and his alleged daughters, who are known to be the largest women in the Club theater, skipped out, and are now working the sympathy dodge on the green journalists of San Diego.

When the head feels dull and heavy the skin appears yellow and greasy, and the stomach refuses food, take Carter's Little Liver Pills. Don't forget this.

SKILLFUL SURGERY. Remarkable Freak of Nature Removed by a Surgical Operation.

San Jose (California) Times. Miss Petra Arabelle, twenty-one years of age, has been residing with her parents at Santa Barbara until a few weeks ago, when, having been seriously ill for some time previously, she came here to visit an aunt, and on consulting physicians found that she had a large cystic abscess, with a view of the removal of which she was taken to the infirmary, being yet so weak that success was considered doubtful.

To remove any risk of blood-poisoning, everything connected with her room was washed in a carbolic solution. At eleven o'clock on Friday she was placed under the influence of anæsthetics, and for two hours four physicians were engaged on the work.

On its conclusion the cyst was found to be as large as the average size of an adult's head and full of pus. A cyst is ordinarily pendulous, but this one adhered to the walls of the abdomen, contained three quarts of pus, a piece of true skin nearly two inches across, on which hair was growing, a well-formed eye-bolt was imbedded in a piece of bone, the thick band of hair twelve inches long and attached to a piece of scalp.

The cause of such misfortune is not understood. The physicians expect that the patient will recover.

Daily Review. GAZETTE OFFICE, FORT WORTH, TEX., May 15, 1888.

Retailers have done but a moderate business in Fort Worth to-day, but wholesalers have been kept quite busy attending to the numerous orders.

DRY GOODS MARKET. The general condition of the trade is characterized by the quietude which generally prevails at this season of the year, and business lacks any marked activity in either first hands or the jobbing circles.

Conservatism is still the predominant characteristic of all business operations, and while the outlook is fairly promising, trade moves along without animation of developing any progressive improvement.

The distributive movement has somewhat quickened with the jobbers and retailers, under the influence of more favorable weather conditions, and business with them, while generally behind that of last year in amount, has been made tolerably good by the numerous reorders for seasonable fabrics.

It is too early yet for any movement of consequence with the commission houses in way of supplies for the next season, and their business is, therefore, as yet entirely confined to moderate hand-to-mouth buying for the actual needs of the present season.—Dry Goods Reporter.
