

S. P. BANDIT SUSPECT JAILED

San Francisco honeymooners, Victims of Holdup, Identify Man in Street

a blue suit with a white hairline stripe, a soft blue hat, net linen and good shoes. His hands showed many indications of manual labor. He has red hair and blue eyes, which at times he turned on his interrogators with sullen defiance, and again dropped as if abashed while questions were piled.

The Southern Pacific police are working on the theory that the suspect committed the holdups which aroused the bay regions last month, including the robbery of the Southern Pacific train at Richmond, the Southern Pacific flyer from San Jose to San Francisco, and the robbery of a mail car near San Jose.

The description of the bandit in those cases tallies with that of the prisoner.

The address, 2732 Mission street, given by Bostick as his home, is a Japanese curio shop and no such person as Bostick is known by the occupant.

In Oakland there is no garage by the name of McNabe, which was given by Bostick as the place where he had his car.

Colen, with his bride, had a drawing room in the car in which Montague was shot by the train bandit. When the robber entered the car Colen was talking with the trainman, who yielded his watch. The bandit was unmasked and Colen had a good view of him all the time he was in the car.

NEW CHARGES IN CANAL OPENED WEIGHT FRAUDS CHRISTMAS DAY?

Press dispatches from Panama advising that Colonel Goethals is quietly preparing a Christmas present for the American people by sending a United States warship, probably the Buffalo, through the canal have stirred this city to enthusiasm, and preparations are being made to respond to Colonel Goethals' gift in a fitting manner.

If the dash comes from the canal that Colonel Goethals' plan has been carried through and the first warship has splashed the waters of the great ditch, sirens will scream the glad tidings from every ship in the harbor, factories will tie down their whistles, bells will toll and the entire city give itself over to rejoicing.

Such was the assertion of Theodore Roche, special prosecutor, during the famous customs fraud trial in the federal court today when Stanley Moore, one of the attorneys for the defense, tried to make it appear that the figures quoted by the government amounted to nothing when the bulk of business transacted was considered.

The entire morning session was much like a class in arithmetic. At times Judge Doelling, the witness Tidwell, the government prosecutors and the expensive defense counsel table all had their brows knotted in percentages that would have been easy for an eighth grader.

POLICE HUNT 2 GIRLS AS HOLDUPS

Rich Mexican Lured to Room by Women and Robbed of $950

Did two girls disguised as men hold up and rob Jose A. Martinez, a Mexican refugee, of jewelry worth $900 and $50 in cash?

That is a question to be settled when Florence Hayes and Guselle Franklin appear in court to answer to the charge of grand larceny, on which warrants for their arrest were issued this morning by Police Judge Deasy. The theory of the police is that the robbers of Martinez were in reality not two holdup men, as they appeared, but two holdup women.

Martinez, a wealthy steamship man, who recently fled to this city from Mexico, was robbed November 14 of money and jewelry worth $950. According to the story he told the police today, he met the girls on the night of the robbery. They took him to an Eddy street house and the three of them bought wine. Martinez drank heavily.

He says that when he awoke he looked into the muzzles of two revolvers held in the hands of two masked men—and that he looked like a man—and that he was relieved of all his money and jewelry.

Jack McCarthy of a private detective agency, who is working on the case, inclines to the theory that the girls dressed in men's clothes and robbed him.

"Color" Furnished Novelist When Drawbridge Held "Snark" Captive

Water will be Jack London's newest inspiration for his new romance, or "movie" scenario, which he launched yesterday on the Snark in the Oakland estuary, off the coast of Fruitvale.

The book will be either a sequel or an antidote to his most recent success, John Barleycorn.

HERE'S STORY OF PLAY

Scene 1—Snark in Oakland estuary, bumps into drawbridge then backs off, is moored at lumber wharf.

Scene 2—Japanese servants appear on deck of Snark with canvas for roof, under which they place table, chair and typewriter.

Scene 3—Jack London, barefooted, in sea jacket, appears and goes to work at typewriter. Works slowly, sighing frequently.

Scene 4—Japanese servants throw buckets of water on deck. Water strikes author's bare feet. London looks up, inspired, and writes.

Scene 5—Author runs to servants, takes bucket from them and dips up sea water. Places bucket of cold water under table, sits down to write, with feet in bucket. Continues writing furiously.

Scene 6—Story finishes. Title, "The Tale of Two Cities."

THESE HELPED HIM WRITE

When London picked up the Snark, the estuary, and Fruitvale as the birthplace of his latest child of fancy, he unconsciously secured assistance in which both the hands of a drawbridge were responsible for the beginning.

By choosing the Snark, London was close to the inspiration, and in going to the quiet purlieus of Fruitvale, London completed the chain of events.

It is a safe guess, knowing these things, that the first chapter of London's newest creation will be: "A Quiet Morning on the Coast of Fruitvale."

The second chapter, if London's customary vein of realism is followed, will read: "My Fight With a Drawbridge."

THESE DRAWBRIDGE STUCK

London came on the Snark to Fruitvale to write the first chapter, and to write the second, because during the recent rains the rust had been given ample time to set all the locks and hinges of the drawbridge, and when the author in his Snark signaled to pass, the bridge refused to move.

London failed to loosen the rusty iron. Result? Five realistic, true to life scenes showing an author at work.

Olympians Will Carry Out Time Honored Custom on New Year's

Definite plans were announced this morning for the annual Olympic club run to the beach. It has been customary for the big club to have its members get together on January 1 for a jollification and hike in the open air, and the day is also made the occasion of the annual midwinter swim in the ocean. This custom has prevailed for many years and the coming new year will see the members on the job as usual.

Last year the club members held their annual hike and jollification at Harbor View, but the location was found not to be to the liking of the swimmers.

The beach below the Cliff house gives the members plenty of opportunity to display their swimming ability, and it is expected that some 500 Olympians will take the annual dip a week from Thursday.

The bank for signatures of the members desiring to take part in the run was posted in the clubhouse this morning. After the dip luncheon will be served and a jolly up held, at which the leading vocalists and musicians of the club will participate.

The feature is usually in the hands of Tiv Kreling and Willie Nelson. Special cars will leave the Olympic club at 10 o'clock on the morning of January 1, and will take the members as far as the Baker street entrance of the panhandle. Here President William Humphrey and his directors will all be present to see the members up and the start for the beach will be made at 10:30.
