

Our Tramp Around the City!

KENTUCKY WEATHER REPORT.

What We May Expect Between This Time and To-morrow Evening.

THE LEDGER'S WEATHER SIGNALS.

White streamer—FAIR; Blue—RAIN OF SNOW; With Black ABOVE—Twill WARMER GROW; If Black's BENEATH—COLDER 'Twill be; Unless Black's shown—no change we'll see.

The above forecasts are made for a period of thirty-six hours, ending at 8 o'clock to-morrow evening.

THE FOUR DEUCES.

The deuce of Spades is that they dig our graves. And build of clinging clay death's narrow palace. The deuce of Clubs is that they make us slaves To midnight revels, orgies and slakewallahs. The deuce of Diamonds is that when we woo, Their purchase stands us in for sums tremendous. The deuce of Hearts is that they prove untrue, And for a newer spark to limbo send us.

A GAY LORD.

He Marries Miss Lillenthal, a Rich New York Girl,

Successful in Making Many Friends in High Commercial Circles.

His Career Since Has Been One of Crime—In Fear of Going to the Penitentiary He Deserts His Wife and Flees to Mexico.

ROME, Ga., June 3.—Walter S. Beresford, or Sidney Lascolles, representing himself to be a son of Lord William Beresford, of England, an assertion that was never proven untrue, although doubted, has closed his eventful career in Georgia by milching her people to the tune of about $10,000, skipping a heavy bond for forgery, committing this among other crimes, and deserting his wife, formerly Miss Mead Lillenthal, of New York.

Eighteen months ago Beresford, or Lascolles, made his first trip to Georgia, being introduced as the third son of an English lord and representing millions of English money to be invested in mineral lands in the south. He was wined and dined by aristocratic families of wealth, and after a few days' sojourn, with a plea of being dejectedly short of change he touched the Hamiltons for $1,000 cash, giving a draft on a London bank—which was afterward returned unpaid—and left for the north.

After swindling parties in New York he was arrested, brought back to Rome, and tried and convicted of forgery, but on technical law points the case was carried to the supreme court for a new trial, Beresford giving bond. During his four months' confinement in the county jail his wife, the daughter of a New York tobacco merchant many times a millionaire, spent every day in his cell.

After his liberation he was so successful in making friends that he had Mr. J. King, president of the Merchants' National bank, and other men of as high standing for references, through which he obtained connections with some of the best commercial houses in the country.

Last week he carried his wife to Atlanta, where he engaged the finest apartments at the best hotel in the city for her and a young lady friend. Tuesday afternoon he and his wife, with the young lady friend, boarded a train in Atlanta for a neighboring summer resort, as was thought.

Before reaching Birmingham, and while in the sleeper, he told his wife that he had received intelligence that his bondsmen were going to withdraw from his bond, and that the forgery case would go against him in the supreme court next week, which would mean a term in the penitentiary, and rather than go back to jail he was going to a foreign land and would probably never see her again. The wife fainted, and was completely prostrated.

At 11 o'clock Beresford completed all his arrangements, and going to his wife, gave her enough money to take her to New York, and this was the last heard of Beresford.

Wednesday Mrs. Lascolles, formerly Mead Lillenthal, left Birmingham for New York, physically a wreck, to return to her mother's home.

It is believed that he went to New Orleans, and there boarded a vessel probably for Mexico. A careful investigation into his affairs shows that the "Lord" absconded with some $8,000, besides skipping his bond of $8,000.

Among the heavy losers were a number of Atlanta and Rome firms, the Pope Manufacturing Co., of Boston, American Gas Controller Co., of Springfield, Mass., and others in different parts of the country.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—For Tennessee and Kentucky—Slightly cooler, cloudiness and showers in eastern portion; fair in west portions; fair and slightly warmer Saturday.
