

EIGHT DROWNED

A Fatal Search For Whisky in Kentucky.

Five Men and Three Women Go Down to Death in a Creek.

The boat became unmanageable and was drifting down stream, when they got frightened, jumped overboard and were drowned.

THE HEIRESS HUNTER

Will Let the Vanderbilts, Goulds and Floods Alone.

NEW YORK, June 17.—The marriageable daughters of millionaires throughout the country are to receive no more epistles from that disgraced wife-hunter, Joseph P. Megler, of No. 428 East Eighty-first street, who, as told in the Herald; has, since 1885, been sending letters asking for the privilege of bestowing himself upon the grand-daughter of Mrs. W. H. Vanderbilt, Miss Helen Gould, Miss Jennie Flood and other heiresses.

"I still believe," said he, "that I am destined to marry some beauty worth millions of dollars, but I shall not write any more letters to Mrs. Vanderbilt or to the ladies that I have offered to marry. If I should write any more letters to them they might bring me into court, and I do not want that to happen. Heiresses are plentiful in this country, but I do not seem to have much success with them. I think I have done a great deal for the prestige of Mrs. Vanderbilt in publishing those letters I wrote to her. I have applied for the hands of at least 25 maidens during the last seven years. They have all slighted me and now I think I shall stop my letter writing. I have copies of all of my letters, but I shall publish no more of them."

Mrs. Goldsmith, a sister of Megler, says she thinks that he was slightly demented on the subject of marrying millionaires' daughters.

At the time that Crank Norcross blew up Russell Sage's office my brother read all about it to me. He giggled and laughed over it as if that dreadful tragedy was the funniest thing in the world.

Mrs. Goldsmith said she hoped that her husband would take some action in regard to Megler's eccentricities and have him put where he could get proper medical treatment.

Cleveland's Claim.

WASHINGTON, June 17.—The democratic politicians have made up a table, which, according to the friends of Cleveland, put that gentleman far in the lead, and really gives him the nomination. THE BRIDGE DISASTER.

The Dead May Number Over Thirty-Five and the Wounded About Fifteen.

CINCINNATI, June 17.—The dead in the bridge disaster between Covington and Newport, Wednesday, may number over thirty-five and the wounded about fifteen. The loss on the bridge is $15,000. The accident is still the talk of the three cities.

The same work of rescue is going on at the bridge Thursday as Wednesday, and large crowds still come to see the work. The list of the victims has not been completed, and it appears almost impossible to get an authentic report owing to the irregular men employed on the bridge. A couple of strangers who were there and some boys who were swimming beneath the structure, are supposed to have been crushed.

The belief seems to be general that insufficient piling was the cause of the accident. There were enough piles at first, but when the recent rains swelled the river they began to give way. This is the testimony of all who escaped, as well as that of Robt. Baird, one of the contractors who was killed. Whose fault this was is now difficult to decide. Chas. A. Stewart, former civil engineer for Cincinnati, was the engineer in charge, but was absent at the time of the accident.

The injured men and the dead that are not at private houses were taken to St. Elizabeth's hospital and Menninger's undertaking establishment in Covington and the Newport morgue at Betz's establishment in Newport. A ceaseless surge of people are making the rounds of these places. They are inquiring for friends or acquaintances who are missing. Coroners Davis, of Newport, and Wilson, of Covington, were early on the scene.

Among the divers who worked heroically to release bodies from the debris were the following: Charles H. Wilkerson, one of the escaped workmen, and who rescued six bodies; Christ Beck, Herman Burgess and Barney King. The Hercules Carrel, dredge boat, was of good service. Rudolph Schmidt, the boatman, sent over a skiff and three men to the scene.

The bridge span was 392 feet and the traveler, from which most of the men fell, was 126 feet from the river.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., June 17.—Curiously shaped clouds began to form over in the southwest, and many people gazed in wonder at the sight. About 5:30 a. m. a wind sprang up, and off to the west a circling black cloud was seen rapidly advancing and demolishing everything in its course.

At Wells, sidewalks were overturned, stone fronts blown in and other damage done. Several men were blown down by the force of the wind.

Four miles south of Minneapolis lake five farm-houses and buildings were caught in the storm and utterly demolished. Four people were killed.

The chairman of the river and harbor committee, Mr. Blanchard, insisted that this provision should be cut out, and his wishes were respected. Judge Caldwell made a strong appeal Thursday to have the provision for the survey remain in the bill, but his appeal was useless. He threatened to fight the bill, but that did no good.

The killed are: Lewis N. Meyer, Mrs. Shelby, of Chicago, and an unknown man. The injured are Harry Phillips and Mrs. Hattie Olsen, also of Chicago. The catastrophe was the result of a bolt of lightning which struck the monument, in the corridors of which nearly fifty persons had sought shelter. At the first signs of the approaching storm, Lincoln park, in which the monument stands, was covered with people, who had prepared to enjoy the cool of the evening. The storm began with a slight shower, which rapidly developed into a small hurricane, accompanied by a downpour of rain, vivid flashes of lightning and terrific peals of thunder. When its fury was at its highest a blinding flash struck the statue, taking its course directly through the little crowd who had sought safety in its inclosures. Everybody, with the exception of three men, was thrown to the ground, but all were uninjured except those named. The bolt did not strike the bronze figure of Grant, and the damage to the monument will be covered by a few dollars.

Mason jumped off his horse and ran to the field, and found a large brindle bull goring a colored woman. The woman was on the ground, and the bull was making desperate lunges at her. Mason jumped the fence and ran to the woman's assistance. When within a few feet of the infuriated animal, the bull saw him and left the woman and charged him. Mason grabbed the bull's horns, and by a sudden twist, threw the animal head foremost, and in the fall the bull broke his neck and died almost instantly. The woman was found not to be badly hurt, but her clothes were literally torn to pieces, and she would have been killed in a few minutes.
