Lexington H. O. T.

The hayseed Magistrates of Fayette county have ordered the Lexington city clock run by sun time, but The Leader says the clock on St. Paul's Catholic Church steeple will still mark standard time. The Government Building clock has always marked standard time, and will continue to do so. That Courthouse clock is no good anyway. It has moss all over it, just like the Magistrates who want it to keep hayseed time. An act making standard time the official time of Kentucky is now pending in the Legislature, and when adopted, as it is likely to be, the squabble in Lexington will be put to an end, notwithstanding Squire Royster's assertion that the Legislature has no control over Fayette county.

Another Horrible Accident.

Will people never cease monkeying with firearms? THE LEDGER is called upon to record another sad death from that cause. A lad named Pugh, aged about 15 years and a grandson of Kenas Farrow, lives with the family of Jack Gillespie near Wedonia. Sunday just after noon he got hold of an old pistol and began snapping it at various members of the family. It finally went off when pointed at the head of Mr. Gillespie's five-year-old daughter, the ball entering the side of the head, resulting in death a couple of hours later. The only blame that attaches is that of carelessness; but the grief of the boy can neither restore the life of the innocent child nor assuage the sorrow of the heartbroken mother and father.

JAY GOULD "ROASTED."

A Well-Known Preacher's Estimate of the Dead Many Millionaire.

The Rev. Ferdinand C. Iglehart, Pastor of the Park Avenue M. E. Church, New York, and son-in-law of Mrs. Mary Stewart of this city, in the course of a sermon on the character of the late Jay Gould used these strong words:

Every man has a moral face as distinct as the clay features which he wears. Jay Gould was the shell in which avarice was incased, the house where dishonor dwelt. No bad man is all bad. Gould was temperate, chaste, true and devoted to his family, and in these respects to be commended. His mental brilliancy was a misfortune, for it made him more masterful in wrong-doing, and his indomitable industry was a curse, for it multiplied his power for the ruin of others.

Gould, with his $70,000,000, was one of the most colossal failures of our time. He was a purely selfish man. His greed consumed his charity. He was like death and hell—gathering in all; giving back nothing. The love of money was the root of all evil to him. The motive that nerves the footstep of the burglar, that nerves the arm of the highwayman, is the same that prompted Gould to break his neighbor up to build himself.

A beautiful estimate of him is an evidence of a healthy public virtue. The Nation's ideals in statesmanship are Washington and Lincoln, in generalship Grant and Sherman, in poetry Longfellow and Whittier—all pure men, all unselfish men. Jay Gould is not America's ideal of a rich man. She has ideals living and dead, those who use their wealth for their families, their fellows and their God.

It may be that Gould is the legitimate offspring of Wall street. Wall street has many honorable men and dealings, but the little Jay Goulds there are as thick as hops, who are crying themselves hoarse at the sins of Gould, whose sin consists in his having outwitted them. His enormous success emphasizes the dangerous, the destructive spirit of unfair speculation.

It may be that Gould is only the natural expression of the spirit of dishonesty too prevalent in everyday life; of the misrepresentation, tricks and sharp dealings in the world of finance. There are little Jay Goulds everywhere, bending over ledgers and scattered through the callings of life.
