The enterprise of the managers of The Lexington Herald is again brought into special notice by the recent publication of a neat little book, with choice testimonials which the press of the state has accorded that paper. The Herald is certainly holding its own in the newspaper fraternity and in every department is a credit to journalism in Kentucky. It is edited by Colonel W. C. P. Breckinridge, whose able articles attract National attention.

A long while ago the C. and O. enjoined the local authorities from fling it for not putting safety-gates at certain street crossings. The affidavits and counter-affidavits, and petitions, cross-petitions and good-natured petitions, to say nothing of pleadings, inter-pleadings and outer-pleadings, would make a book big enough to paralyze Uncle Sam's "War Records." Judge Harbeson has for weeks been wading "knee deep in January" and February—through this heterogeneous conglomeration of aggregated legal lingo, until he finally concluded that the C. and O. had no right to enjoin the city as heretofore and heretofore narrated—b'gosh! But the Railway Company will probably appeal—b'jng!

BASKET BALL.

Schwartz's Braves Win in Fine Game at Y. M. C. A. Last Night.

Two teams in the tournament of basket ball, neither of which has won a game, met last night at the Y. M. C. A. for a tussle.

It was very late, much after the time appointed, when the umpire tossed the ball and play began.

By way of parenthesis it is not amiss to comment on the dilatoriness of the players and the lack of regard most of the fellows have for an engagement.

Promptness is a point in integrity's work, and a due observance of it would bring no discredit upon anyone.

But to the game. It is not too much to claim that the two teams are splendidly matched, the personnel is fine and the concerted work excellent. Possibly with one or two exceptions no better timber could be gotten together for capable playing, and the fact that no winning game had been their lies in misfortune and not inability.

The game was won by Schwartz's Braves, the score being 20 to 13.

The teams lined up as follows:

Braves: Schwartz, Rosenham, Wright, Miles, Owens, Crawford, Pangburn, Hasp, Dinger, Roberts, Carnahan, Miller, Dinger.

For fifty-six years he had been a resident of Mason county, the early part of the time having been spent in Maysville, where he aided in building some of the most substantial improvements in the city.

He is survived by his wife, whom he married in Martinsburg, Va., and four sons and two daughters,—Thomas of Newport, James of Washington, Daniel and Edward of Germantown, the daughters being Mrs. Garret Gibbons of Fernleaf and Miss Lizzie Fitzgerald of Germantown.

The funeral will take place at 10 o'clock Sunday morning, sun time, from his late residence, and the interment will be in the cemetery at Washington.

Limestone Debating Club!

GOLIATH-OF-THE-FIFTH

Speaks to "Whistling Rufus" in Unmistakable Terms:

AND DAT DE KINSEQUENCES OF DE TRUSTS AM MIGHTY!

On last Friday night the Sixth Ward Burlesquers got on a high-lonesome, and everything was rag time from start to finish.

The champions, each of whom had their respective followers to root and coach for them, had their habits on, and no grass was allowed to accumulate under their feet, while the wind fairly sizzled through Grandpap's whiskers.

And when the thing was billed down to a finish, two peoples were found to compose the drama of the evening, and nothing could be found more exciting and thrilling from Saengerfest to Coney Island. The all-important subject of Trusts was to be disposed of in some way or another; and when the gong sounded the time for action to take place, Mr. Daily, the "Goliath of the Fifth," sprang to his feet and declared that "Trusts were detrimental to the interests of the people, while Mr. Dryden, the "Tall Sycamore," said he was a Trusty man and told his opponent to shoot or give up the gun, and thereupon Mr. Daily sang the opening ode in rag-time—

"If a body meet a Trust a-comin' through the eye, If that Trust don't get his dust, he'll be a lucky guy."

He started out by defining the meaning of Trusts and how they were being operated. He contended that the combination of capital did not necessarily create a Trust, except when such capital shut off competition, then in that event the evils became manifest. He gave a practical illustration in the way of consolidating two Ice Factories in the city of Maysville, where each employed twenty men at $1.50 per day, and by combining the two factories twenty men were thrown out of employment, competition shut out, price of ice increased and price of labor decreased; hence the disadvantages to the majority of the people. He said that this illustrates the action of Trusts in every phase, and when an independent man bucks up against the Trust, he is a gone goshin' and you can bet your dirty sox on it.

Mr. Daily looked the judges right square in the eye and could read in their countenance a foregone conclusion and said, "Oh! What's the use?" and turned his attention to the audience and said in the language of the poet:

If th' bugs ain't on th' taters, Then I fight th' army worms, While them Wall street speculators Run th' bull gal-darn coosen: So, b' gosh, I'm goin' to quit it. Would you blame me if I should Make a break for some ole office, Bein' talkin' ain't no good!

Mr. Daily made many forcible arguments and the testimony of his contemporaries shows that his power over those who heard him and sympathized with his thought sufficiently to cease conscious resistance to it, was too great to be adequately described.

Mr. Dryden then followed with his voice exerted to its utmost power, penetrating every recess and corner of the Hall. He pronounced in deepest tones of pathos these words of solemn significance:

"A horse! My kingdom for a horse. My feller-countrymen, this is a great land of ours! If we want to prove this statement, all we have to do is to jump from the time of Isaac, Jacob and Esau to the shores of Boston where that sacred tea party was held. At that time old England dominated this great land of ours and wanted to compel us to do certain things whether we wanted to or not; but we said to her, come on you son-of-a-gun, you may drive a horse to water, but you can't make him drink; and remember, while we defied and denounced our mother country, there were very few patriotic and mud-stricken farmers in our land, yet they were the very bone and sinure of our country. [Applause.] This country of ours, feller-citizens, was a vast wilderness; a few shrubs here and there dotted the fertile banks of the Ohio river where we now reside. What has brought about this vast change? The answer is, Capital. [Applause.] Wake up! wake up! wake up! Why this is a great country of ours! Look way back yander when we had to go to school in the old log hut, where hoop poles were driven into the side of the house and the skins of rattlesnakes was stretched over them for desks, and where logs were split in two with the smooth side up served as a seat to sit upon. Are not the school-houses of today and the apartment-comforts thereto due to capital? I would say yes, on your tintype. [Applause.]

"Gentlemen, this is a great country of ours! Why I earnestly believe that capital and labor should go hand in hand to make us prosperous. Look at the railroads and other carperations how they build up the community. There is the little schoolhouse on the briny stream of Bullcreek that was built by the taxes collected from the C. and O. Railroad, yet it is being cussed and damned from Jericho to Halerfax. What makes the young men of this audience look so fruitful with their standin'-up-collars and billed shirts on and their hair cropped short? Why, it is the workin' of capital, and dantchefergittit. Everything is figger'd down to a gnat's heel, and we as a country wouldn't be knee high to a duck if we were to crush capital and follow the principles set out by my opponent, which are nothing more than Anarchy. It all depends on whose ox is gored. There wouldn't be any greater gold-bug than my opponent if he were placed in the same position and had the same opportunities as the Capitalists. He would be like King Midas, that when he would sit down to the table for his meals he would want to find a goldfish on his plate with little bones of golden wires and the scales be thin plates of gold; and he would go so far as to hays the sun cease to give light by day, the moon cease to light up the paths of darkness, and stars cease to glitter and embellish the sky by night.

Mr. Dryden had more than taken up the time allotted to him and he was forced to resume his seat.

After a brief speech by Mr. Daily the evening exercise was brought to a close with a verdict in favor of Mr. Dryden.

The subject for discussion this evening will be "Mrs. Carrie Nation," and everybody is cordially invited.
