THE KENTUCKY ELECTION.

The New York World contains the following interview with Mr. Waterston: "How is it, Mr. Waterston, the reporter asked, when there was little hope of a Democratic President, Kentucky gave 50,000 Democratic majority, and now that we actually have a Democratic President, this Democratic majority is on 17,000?"

"Much more attention is given the result in Kentucky than it justly deserves," Mr. Waterston replied. "It is without particular significance. One set of theorists seek to strain it to the point that it is a protest against what they call free trade. The World made a conclusive answer to this when it recalled the circumstances then, during all these years of overvaluing Democratic majorities in Kentucky the tariff issue was even more pronounced than it showed itself in the canvass just ended. Another set of theorists would ascribe the falling off in the vote to a feeling of dissatisfaction with the President. This is equally an error with the other. The Kentucky Democrats discharged their displeasure with the President of their State convention and platform resolution, and having done this, as a matter of justice to themselves, they thought little more about it. In a general way it might be said that they conceived the intention. I don't think, directly, the Administration lost us many, if any, votes. It simply made us none. It would be perhaps fairer to say that it cut little figure either way."

"To what, then, do you ascribe the loss?" "To a variety of causes. For many years, in Kentucky and elsewhere, great masses of men who have no special affinity, have been voting and acting together on account of some single issue or pressure. As these exceptional influences are weakened those whom they held begin to fall away, each will return to his natural allegiance. Commonly their first step in this direction is not to vote at all. In the South the tendency works against the Democrats; in the North against the Republicans. Where there is an overwhelming majority there is likely to be a lack of friction or a lack of organization. This was notably in the late Kentucky canvass. The Democrats were on dress parade. The Republicans felt that, deprived of Federal offices, it was a "ground-hug case." They thought they might catch a vessel asleep and they very nearly did."

"So you acquit the President of any responsibility for the Democratic decline?" "I think that the superficial behavior of the people in the State of Kentucky at Washington and certain interference in the relation of the Administration to the party have produced a lassitude in Democratic party spirit everywhere. This has doubtless had an unconscious effect in Kentucky. But I do not think it has gone the length of a purposeful protest against the President, who is regarded with a kind of complacent good humor as a well-meaning and obstinate favorite of fortune, who cares very little what happens so it doesn't happen to him."

"How do you mean?" "Just exactly what I say. You will observe that in all of the President's utterances the one exclusive subject is the tariff. He never has a word for the Democratic party. It does not seem to occur to his mind that there are any 'ghosts' lying in wait for the party which put him in the White House. They are only lying in wait for him. It is at him, not at the party, that the 'wolves' and the 'tigers' are howling. All his complaints are those of an individual, not of a party leader. I am sometimes led to suppose that he is still afraid of the party that elected him President, and that, considering himself, as he is so often told by the Mugwumps, stronger than the party, he purposely keeps it in the background. To my mind this is both dangerous and ungrateful, because the party and the Administration are one and inseparable—must stand or fall together; and, as I have always regarded the renomination of the President as inevitable, I want to see him pursue that course which will win him the support of the Democratic heart and fill it with the instinct of victory."

THE DR. STANDIFORD TROUBLE. Standiford Journal. The Louisville Commercial tells a sensational story in regard to the marriage of Dr. Standiford and Miss Scott of Paducah. It says that during an amateur performance in that city Murray Keller, the doctor's son-in-law, who was occupying a box with the doctor, got to flirting with Miss Scott, who was one of the actresses. The doctor asked who the woman was smiling at and Keller told him he had evidently made a mash on her. This tickled the doctor's vanity and he kept up the fun. He did not meet her then, however, but going home and getting drunk he went all the way back to Paducah and secured an introduction to the lady, proposed, was accepted and returned to Louisville, leaving her to inform him by telegraph the day she would set for the marriage. The doctor remained on the spree and his family getting wind of his intentions tried every way to break off the match. In his lucid moments the doctor himself realized that he put his foot in it and offered her $20,000 to let him off. It was refused and the doctor continuing his spree filled up a check for $100,000 and offered it to a Louisville lady to marry him. When the wedding day arrived, Dr. Standiford was unaccountably compelled to Paducah and was so drunk during the ceremony that he was only able to mutter incoherently "I do, I do," to everything the preacher said. The family claim that Miss Scott never of the doctor's condition and simply remarked, "This is a matter of business." The widow has notified the children that she is mistress at the Fourth avenue mansion and they quickly took the hint and left. Suit will be instituted to contest her right to a third interest in the estate and the good name of the doctor will be dragged in the dust to save the children a few thousands of dollars. It is hard to believe such stories of a man who stood as high as Dr. Standiford and it is to be hoped that the newspaper has gone behind the record in preparing a sensational story for the scandal-mongers and playing into the hands of those who will try to prove in court all that will be printed.

NATURAL GAS AT WINCHESTER.

Democrat. Mayor Garner is organizing a stock company to bore for water and natural gas at the abandoned well of S. P. Kerr on Main Street. This well was bored some seven or eight years ago by Mr. Kerr to get water to run his large mill. After going to a depth of 87 feet without striking water, Mr. Kerr abandoned the enterprise. In those days natural gas was hardly thought of, except in Pittsburgh district, and the fact that there was a well of gas in Winchester from this well attracted nothing but idle curiosity. Mr. Kerr went so far as to light this gas and the flow was abundant enough to feed a flame for several hours. In the face of these facts the well was stopped up and abandoned. It is now supposed that gas from this well attracted nothing but idle curiosity. Mr. Kerr went so far as to light this gas and the flow was abundant enough to feed a flame for several hours.
