MANLY WORDS.

The following are the manly words of James Egan and the reasons for his resignation of the office of Sword Bearer for the Dublin Corporation rather than participate in the reception to Great Britain's sovereign in the Irish metropolis: "I will yield nothing to any Irishman in respect for the individuality of the aged woman, but I can not join in any act of public courtesy toward the head of a State which has tried me upon charges that were false and sent me to suffer for nine years in English dungeons—the State that still marks me with the degradation of a ticket-of-leave man."

GONE THE LIMIT.

According to an announcement in a local afternoon paper, the female employes of Herman Straus, the Market-street dry goods merchant, will be required by the management to wear uniforms after May 1. Now-a-days the methods adopted in advertising one's business are various and many. All sorts of means are resorted to for the purpose of drawing custom, but it seems to us that Mr. Straus has gone the limit when he would make the young women employed by him the advertising vehicle to bring his house into the public gaze. The proposed uniform is to consist of a white shirt waist and black skirt and to be furnished the saleswomen free of cost by Mr. Straus. A white shirt waist and black skirt at the best are not an expensive apparel, and we presume that the Straus uniform will not be selected with a view to its richness. It would be interesting to know, however, how the young women feel over the proposed innovation in their manner of attire. It's a 100 to 1 shot that many of them are opposed to "boss" rule in the matter of what they should wear and are not at all agreeable to donning a funeral costume, even though it is paid for by their employer.

DEWEY.

Admiral Dewey announces that he will accept the Presidency if the people want him. This has caused some surprise and comment, but is only considered seriously by few. The Admiral has been lionized and feted by the people, but if he goes into politics he will soon discover that the public regard Admiral Dewey, the hero of Manila, and George Dewey, a candidate for President, quite differently. The Admiral, who confesses entire ignorance of politics, having never cast a vote, and accustomed only to the rigid discipline of the navy, where in his official capacity he was treated with subservient respect and his word was law without question, seems to have been brought under sway by his matrimonial venture. Usually when a man of the Admiral's years takes a new wife, she wears the pa—unmentionables, and Dewey's case is confessedly no exception. Mrs. Dewey is an ambitious and shrewd lady, desirous of prominence of power, and to her is attributed the change of mind and buzzing of the Presidential bee in Dewey's headgear. There is nothing discreditable in this, but the Admiral, when the public criticised him for transferring property given him by the people to his wife, and for other little incidents of marital affairs, became hot about it. If he gets into politics he is likely to have little peace of mind, for he may expect no mercy from the opposition in the matter of criticism.

If fact, though his announcement of his willingness to be a candidate is not yet a week old, the punster has begun. An Eastern paper, facetiously approving Dewey's candidacy, thus announces its ticket:

For President, Admiral George Dewey.
For Vice President, Admirals McLean-Hazen-Dewey.

Oom Paul was reported to have assured the Boers that he would recapture Bloemfontein and drive Lord Roberts out of the Orange Free State. This was ridiculed by the British press. In the past week the Boers have defeated the British advance divisions, driving into Bloemfontein; have captured and hold the water-works, cutting off the water supply, and are now reported to be threatening the railroads and routes to the south, which, if successful, will completely cut off Roberts from his base, putting him and his large army in a state of siege, for which they are not prepared and could not long withstand, leaving the only alternative of fighting their way out or surrendering. The glowing prospects of the Roberts-Kitchener expedition to promptly crush the Boers have changed to gloom and anxiety as to what the next few days may develop.

Well, Senator Harrel has squealed because a promised office is not forthcoming. Is it possible that Col. Whallen told the truth about his transaction with Harrel, and that Harrel in his statements and testimony didn't "hew to the line"? The mystery of the affair, as well as the desperate effort to prevent the indictment and prosecution of Harrel, is coming in sight. They wouldn't give Whallen a trial and wouldn't allow Harrel to be tried—but when rogues fall out the usual result follows. If Harrel is not squelched the real instigators of the attempt to besmirch Col. Whallen may be exposed to the light. No one ever suspected Harrel of being more than a cat's paw, and now in an open letter he virtually admits it. Who was behind Harrel?

A youth named Sipido fired two shots at the Prince of Wales in Brussels. He was arrested, and is believed to be crazy. He stated that he wanted to kill the man who caused the South African war. He proved not only a bad shot, but would have missed had he killed the Prince, who is about as complete a nonentity as carries a title and draws allowance from the public. He has never been known to say or do anything in affairs of government. The men who caused the South African war are in London and South Africa.

Major Kirkman, who grossly insulted Archbishop Chappelle while aboard a United States transport en route to Manila, has been sentenced by court-martial to dishonorable dismissal from the army for conduct unbecoming a soldier and gentleman. The sentence was approved by Major General Otis. Kirkman's defense was that he was drunk. It seems that kind of "American patriotism" does not meet with favor among the soldier boys.

Instead of besieging, bombarding and capturing Pretoria and ending the Boer war and the South African question at one fell swoop, "Little Bobs" is more likely to right-about and get back into Cape Colony—if he can—with his large but ill-supplied army, which is being driven into Bloemfontein from three sides, only the southern route being open, and that menaced by advancing and victorious Boers, who threaten to cut his communication with base of supplies.

Tomorrow marks the beginning of holy week. At its close the Lenten season for 1900 will be over. The coming week, including as it does Good Friday, is the most solemn period in the forty days set specially aside by the church for prayer and fasting. It will be religiously observed by our people all over the city and, as in the past, will no doubt be productive of great good to those who sincerely enter into the spirit of its services.

The vaunted "Yeomanry," England's blue-blooded militia, who took complete toilets, even to tooth brushes and the like, in their haversacks when they went to the Boer war, were pounced upon by the rude Boers at Kroon's Spruit, and only 150 of the 500 escaped, the others—are missing, and all royal and noble England is in tears. Wonder what those crude Dutchmen will do with the toilet sets and fixins' and the dudes!

The Kentucky Irish American employs no collectors. Only bills bearing the signature of the publisher should receive recognition.

The Council did right to defeat the proposition to sell the city's gas stock to buy Central Park or anything else.
