

RHEUMATISM

Distorts Muscles, Shatters Nerves, Stiffens Joints.

Is due to an acid poison which gains access to the blood through failure of the proper organs to carry off and keep the system clear of all morbid effluvia. This poison, through the general circulation is deposited in the joints, muscles and nerves, causing the most intense pain.

Rheumatism may attack with such suddenness and severity as to make within a few days a healthy, active person helpless and bed-ridden, with distorted limbs and shattered nerves; or it may be slow in developing, with slight wandering pains, just severe enough to make one feel uncomfortable; the tendency in such cases is to grow worse, and finally become chronic.

Like other blood diseases, Rheumatism is often inherited, and exposure to damp or cold, want of proper food, insufficient clothing, or anything calculated to impair the health, will frequently cause it to develop in early life, but more often not until middle age or later. In whatever form, whether acute or chronic, acquired or inherited, Rheumatism is strictly a blood disease, and no liniment or other external treatment can reach the trouble. Neither do the preparations of potash and mercury, and the various mineral salts, which the doctors always prescribe, cure Rheumatism, but ruin the digestion and break down the constitution.

Rheumatism is Strictly a Blood Disease,

A remedy which builds up the general health and at the same time rids the system of the poison is the only safe and certain cure for Rheumatism. S. S. S., made of roots, herbs and barks of wonderful properties, attacks the disease in the right way, and in the right place—the blood—and quickly neutralizes the acid and dissolves all poisonous deposits, stimulates and reinforces the overworked, worn-out organs, and clears the system of all unhealthy accumulations. S. S. S. cures permanently and thoroughly, and keeps the blood in a pure, healthy state.

Mr. J. O. Malley, 123 W. 13th Street, Indianapolis, Ind., for eighteen months was so terribly afflicted with Rheumatism he was unable to feed or dress himself. Doctors said his case was hopeless. He had tried fifty-two prescriptions that friends had given him, without the slightest relief. A few bottles of S. S. S. cured him permanently, and he has never had a Rheumatic pain since. This was five years ago.

The store-stove loafer "knewed it all the time."

HE FOUND THE NICKEL.

The Ostentatious Young Swell Was Hardly a Match for the Street Car Conductor.

The presence of half a dozen unusually pretty young women may have had something to do with the beginning of the incident. It so happened that they were there at the close was anything but pleasant to one of the principal actors, says the Philadelphia Inquirer.

It occurred on an Eleventh street car an afternoon or two ago. At a corner not many squares from Market street a stylishly dressed young man clambered aboard and took a seat far from the Saunterer. His manner indicated that he was pretty well satisfied with himself and that he didn't rate the rest of mankind as being in the same elevated class. Settling himself back comfortably he threw one knee over the other and started to ogle the above-mentioned unusually pretty young women.

Just about this time the conductor came along on a fare-collecting trip. Halting opposite the self-satisfied young man he extended his hand. "Fare, please," he said.

The self-satisfied young man shoved down into his trousers pocket and fished out a small bunch of bills. Peeling off one he handed it to the conductor ostentatiously. The conductor examined it coolly.

"I can't change this," he said. "Have'n't you anything smaller?" "None," replied the young man in a loud voice. "I'm out of everything but hundred-dollar bills to-day. Can let you take your choice of four or five of them, though."

With a grin in the direction of the unusually pretty young women he pulled out the bunch of bills again and displayed four more "hundreds." The conductor looked the self-satisfied young man over meditatively. Then he ambled back to the rear-end of the car with the hundred-dollar bill in his hand. A square further up the street he came back.

"Here—hold your hat," he exclaimed to the self-satisfied young man, at the same time drawing his hand from his coat pocket and extending it filled to the full with nickels, dimes and quarters. "I can give you $18.95 now. The other $81 I'll get for you when we reach the car barn at the end of the run."

The self-satisfied young man turned as red in the face as though he were on the verge of an apoplectic stroke. Reaching out he grabbed the hundred-dollar bill the conductor still held in his other hand and pushed it savagely down into his vest pocket.

"I don't need your change," he ejaculated savagely. "I've found five cents I didn't know I had."

Then he handed over five pennies, which the conductor rang up with a chuckle of satisfaction he made no effort to conceal. The "bling" of the fare register bell was echoed by a peal of laughter from the lips of half a dozen unusually pretty young women, the self-satisfied young man's grin took on a sickly hue and the car rolled merrily on.

JAPANESE SAILORS' FRIEND.

A Scotch Girl in London Tries to Make Their Stay in That Port Pleasant.

The Japanese sailors who visit England have a true friend in Miss McLean, a pleasant-faced Scotch girl who has taken them under her protecting wing, as it were. When they visit England the Japanese sailors want to see as many sights as they can during their brief stay. There was no one to guard them against crimps or show them round until Miss McLean took up the work. Thanks to her, the sailors receive a warm welcome at the special Japanese institute for sailors which she has organized at Tilbury.

Miss McLean has for years taken a deep interest in the people of Japan. For a long time she labored as a missionary in their midst, and on her return to England she determined that as far as possible she would still work for them. She therefore settled close to the docks and has since made it her business to visit every Japanese vessel that enters the port of London. In this way she became acquainted with the sailors and gained their confidence.

Finding that they were all eager to see London, she offered to act as their guide, and the Japanese sailors accepted it with delight, and accordingly under her escort thousands of Japanese sailors have been conducted over all the public buildings and places of interest in the metropolis.

SOUTH AMERICA LEAST KNOWN

More Exploration Remains to Be Done in That Continent Than in Any Other.

When we recall that the Spaniards crossed South America from sea to sea more than three centuries ago and that nearly every city on its coasts was founded in the age of the Columbian explorers, it seems strange that to-day our southern neighbor is the least known of all the continents. There are not so many big white spaces on the map of Africa as on that of South America. If we study the history of South American exploration we find some surprising facts. One is that up to 1875 not a single government in that continent had sent out any expeditions or spent any money to explore the unknown parts of their territories. Until within the past few years nearly all the exploration of this century in that continent, excepting in Argentina and Chili, has been the result of private enterprise. A few explorers from North America and many more from Europe have made most of this century's additions to our geographical knowledge of South America, except in the southern part of the continent, says the New York Sun.

Thus it happens that none of the Cordilleran states from Venezuela to the stage of the rough, pioneer exploration. A considerable part of their territory, as in the southeastern part of Colombia, is still almost wholly unknown. Some of them, like Bolivia, have made no attempt whatever, except in small districts around their chief towns, to carry out official surveys. They have to thank foreign explorers for most that they themselves know of their own countries. It is Conway, who recently passed through New York to renew his work in the Bolivian Andes, that is supplying the Bolivians with very good maps of their own part of the Cordilleras. He is doing for Bolivia what other explorers, chiefly German, have done for Ecuadorian ranges.

The same condition of affairs is to be observed among the Atlantic states as far south as Uruguay. The Guianas, except for the narrow strip along the coast, are still on the threshold of the beginnings of exploration. Brazil, with a territory nearly as large as our own, has not a single establishment like our geological or coast and geodetic surveys to make a careful geographical study of any part of its vast domain. All the official explorations that have been made in any part of Brazil are the work of some of the individual states. Scarcely a traveler has crossed any of the northeastern states from Maranhao to Pernambuco, and much of the interior, except along the river courses, is still quite unknown. The wide wildernesses between the large tributaries of the Amazon are completely a terra incognita.

In Argentina, however, very satisfactory progress has been made in exploration in the past quarter of a century. It was in 1882 that the first collected results of the government's activity in this direction were seen in the large atlas of the country prepared under the direction of the geographer Seelstrang. Argentina has the advantage of geological and meteorological establishments and foreign scientific men in the service of the state and the universities, whose labors have largely enhanced the value of all official geographical work. The systematic study which both Argentina and Chili have for some years given to the ranges along their common frontier have made this the best known part of the South American Cordilleras.

Just as sportsmen travel thousands of miles to reach the big game of central Africa, India and Manchuria, so explorers will turn, in the next century, to the large, untraveled areas of South America as the best fields for the world has now to offer for original, pioneer research in the way of geographical discovery.
