Bleucher 46158, record 2:29 1/4, trial mile 2:14 3/4, half in 1:06, last quarter in 32 seconds, is a handsome seal brown horse, and will weigh 1100 pounds. He greatly resembles his good sire Silent Brook and is out of Clay, by the great Futurity sire Moko. A grand combination of two of the best race horse families of the present day. He being a real race horse himself, having had very little training and most of that by an amateur. It certainly looks like this horse is of Grand Circuit caliber, and if given half a chance he will win his share of the money sure.

BLEUCHER is a perfect type of a road horse, good gaited with perfect manners, wears no boots, or weights. He was a money winner at the Blue Grass Fair last year and is conceded by good judges to be the best road horse out this year.

This is a good opportunity for Garrard and adjoining counties to breed in to the best families of the trotting blood. Look this horse's breeding over and see how many they have in the list both sire and dam.

This great trotting Stallion will make the season of 1913 at my stable in Lancaster, Kentucky, at

"I am under the impression that Gordon Todd will prove to be a great sire" as he was good headed, pure gaited, with plenty knee, shoulder and stride action which all good sires have to have. I do think that had he been sound he would have gone a mile in 2:04 or 2:05 and probably faster. Yours truly,

Mr. Walter says that there are many people from this state who would gladly come back if they could do so without too great a sacrifice.

NEW FUEL FOR MOTOR DRIVEN VEHICLES.

"Parlor" Said To Be An Excellent Substitute For Gasoline.

(By Consul Edwin N. Gunsaulus, Johannesburg, S. A.)

A new locally invented fuel for use in internal combustion engines, which is said by the inventors to be equal if not superior to gasoline (petrol) in efficiency, besides having the advantage of reduced cost, has lately been introduced in Johannesburg, and is attracting considerable attention in motor circles by reason of the success which has attended tests.

The inventors of this gasoline substitute, which has been given the name of "parlor", are Messrs. Jenkins and Livesay, of Johannesburg, and they are confident that their invention will prove a most valuable one for motor-driven vehicles from an economic standpoint.

Parol is made from paraffin, its conversion being accomplished by a chemical process and without the use of heat. Aside from the chemicals used, the only accessories required for the preparation of the fluid in large quantities are tanks, pumps and mixers. It is claimed that by means of the chemical process employed the property which creates carbon in the cylinders and forms soot on the sparking plug is removed, and the strong odor of paraffin is likewise eliminated when the machine is in use.

The paraffin which has been used in all of the tests up to the present time is of 150 fire test. The cost of parol as a finished product is estimated at about 50 per cent, more than paraffin, or about 25 per cent less than petrol, measured by the present scale charged for petrol and paraffin. Aside from the lower cost of the new fuel in comparison with petrol greater efficiency is claimed for it, gallon for gallon, while the further claim is made that it evaporates less easily than gasoline. Other advantages pointed out are that it can be used with any ordinary type of carburetor that no adjustment or alteration is necessary to the engines or any of the mechanism of either car or cycle, and that its use will not cause any deterioration of the machinery.

TESTS SHOW FAVORABLE RESULTS.

Numerous tests of parol as fuel for motor cars and motorcycles have recently been made here, and all of these, so far as known, have been decidedly favorable to the new invention. On invitation the writer accompanied the inventors on a trial trip to Pretoria a few days previous to the writing of this report, the party consisting of five persons, and the machine being a five-passenger, twenty-horsepower Ford taxicab from the Johannesburg public stand. Before leaving Johannesburg the tank was entirely emptied of the petrol with which it is ordinarily run and filled with parol, the car having been examined and passed as being in full running condition, without alteration to engine or carburetor. The distance of thirty-six miles over a road exceptionally hilly was made without stop in one hour and forty minutes, each way, the weight of passengers aggregating 765 pounds. The quantity of fuel consumed on the entire trip of seventy-two miles was two and two-third gallons, equaling twenty-seven miles to the gallon. No misfire or knocking occurred, and the driver declared that the engine was cooler than with petrol. All hills, except one each way, were climbed on top gear. No smoke was visible, and scarcely any odor was noticeable.

MEANT ANOTHER MAN

BY LOUISE HEYLGERS.

"When will you come back?" asked the woman.

"Next spring," answered the man. "Just when the leaves are green I shall be here with you again."

"They are yellow now," said the woman, her eyes on the fading trees about them. A cold little wind sent plenty of bronze and golden treasures fallen from their branches scurrying about their feet.

There was a smell of damp earth and bracken in the air. On the gray river beyond more yellow leaves floated, heralds to the water fowl of the coming winter.

It is not easy in the autumn to think of spring.

The young woman sighed as she looked.

"It will seem a long time," she said.

"But spring comes every year, just the same," the man reminded her. "It is here really all the while buried in the bark and the earth, just waiting for the signal to come to life again."

"I was not thinking of the spring just then," said the woman, "but of you."

"What are six months?" asked the man; "six months out of a lifetime?"

"Everything or nothing," the woman returned. "You may forget."

"But, on the other hand, I might remember." The man slipped an arm through hers caressingly. "Come, Marion, cheer up. I refuse to be depressed by dismal prophecies. I am yours; you are mine. Nothing can alter that—save death."

"And another woman." The words slipped from her almost unconsciously. "You will meet so many on your travels, and the nearest woman is always the dearest."

"You talk as if I were some silly boy," the man frowned. "Have I ever given you cause to be jealous of me, Marion?"

"No," she answered, truthfully. "But then you have never been away before."

"Next time you shall come with me," the man promised her. "We shall be married, Marion, when the leaves are green."

He caught her to him with a sudden passion. "Marion, think of the spring and me," he whispered to her.

But, womanlike, she could only think of the coming winter.

A man and a girl walked upon the grassy slope of a hill in southern France. All about the crocuses gleamed like jewels among the grass. The sun was daffodil, the wind had handfuls of violets, the sky was a big hazy blue.

"I love the spring—don't you?" said the girl, turning a pink and vivid face to his. "It makes me feel as if I were being born again. Everything seems so fresh and new."

"You make the spring for me," answered the man, and his hand touched her dark, uncurled hair.

"But I don't make the sun and the buds and the flowers," objected the girl smilingly. "And the leaves—see how green they are!"

"When the leaves are green." What had he promised another woman last year? To be back when the leaves were green again?

The leaves were green. He caught his breath; then suddenly a thought came to his aid. The trees were green here—yes—in the south, but in England they would still be bare and toss empty branches to the sparrows and the wind.

He had another month at least. He turned impatiently to the girl.

"Kiss me," he said imperatively. "The lips met."

In April trees are green. But April came and went, and one woman walked alone; May, June and July sped by, all rose and gold; August stalked through the land with a scythe beneath his arm; September, red-cheeked, with wind-blown hair, passed like a dream among the orchards. Then came October and the fall of the leaves.

A man and a woman walked together through the woods to where the water gleamed among the trees, like a big, white bird with wings outstretched.

"You are six months late," the woman answered dully.

"But journeys end in lovers' meetings," he returned lightly. "Business kept me, sweetheart—not my will."

"You are six months late," the woman said again. "Too late," she added significantly.

He stared at her. "What do you mean?" he asked.

She turned suddenly and faced him, a red spot of color in either cheek, her eyes dark, intense.

"What does this mean," she asked, "when a man leaves a woman for months without a letter or a word? It means another woman. What does it mean when a woman, left alone for months, turns to somebody else for companionship? It means another man."

"And you promised to wait for me!" The man was white to the lips.

She laughed—a bitter little laugh. "Fill the leaves were green," you said. Well, I waited. But now—she pointed all around to where from every tree the leaves hung brown and gold. They were everywhere beneath the paths. Even upon the water they lay yellow, floating seaward, like the little fireboats that Hindus send after their dead.

A two-faced person makes a specialty of bare-faced lies.

"Young man, when you buy a buggy, be sure it's a Studebaker"

Sound advice from the man who has been driving one for twenty years.

When you buy a Studebaker buggy you are buying all the skill, experience and science in buggy building that half a century can produce. You are protecting yourself against the mistakes of younger builders.

You will always be proud of the Studebaker nameplate, for there isn't a buggy on the road that is its equal for style, luxury and good looks.

Flexible bent-reach gear, graceful lines, solid corner, plugless body, double-ironed shafts, are a few of the special Studebaker features.

The new close-fitting shifting rail is enough in itself to make you buy a Studebaker buggy.
