Miss Christine Sanders was "at home" to the members of the Senior Christian Endeavor Society Friday evening. The party was in the nature of a George Washington celebration and quite a number of colonial characters were represented by both the boys and girls. Most inviting refreshments were served by the young hostess.

The following complimentary article was written by the Crab Orchard correspondent in the International Journal. "The lecture by Reverend Cleve of Lancaster was one of the finest oratorical feasts ever enjoyed in this city. He deserves all the papers say of him, and is, both fearless and potent in his denunciation of the prevailing vices of the present day."

Mrs. Robert Salter, entertained the Executive Committee of the Audubon Club Society yesterday at four o'clock at her home on Broadway. Plans were perfected for six walks through the country during the spring months, with leaders for each walk. Hot chocolate and sandwiches were served by Miss Elizabeth Salter and Miss Lucille Mitchell. The recent unveiling of the portrait of James Lane Allen at Lexington is more than ordinary interest to Lancasterians from the fact that Miss Lee McCann, the young girl who selected the artist and did all the negotiating between portrait painter and committee, is of Garrard ancestry. Miss McCann is the granddaughter of the late Ashburne Price, of Lexington, but formerly of Garrard county, the young Lexingtonian's mother being a first cousin of Messrs W. A. T. J., Ed and N. B. Price, Mrs. Mattie P. Frisbie and the late Mrs. Emma P. Grant of this place. Miss McCann is regarded as a young artist of rare promise, and her mother having spent several years in New York City where she has had fine advantages in her chosen vocation. The young Lexington artist has made several trips to Europe and has made study sketches of some of the most famous paintings in the Royal Academy at London.

ISON

She was regarded as one of the most lovable women of the Buena Vista section, and her many friends join with her bereaved family in deploring her irreparable loss.

OAKES.
 Mr. Thomas Oakes, the aged father of John and Ben Oakes, of this city, died at his home near Stanford on the 20th. It will be remembered that Mr. Oakes was run over by an auto four weeks ago which caused his death. He was born in Wayne, county, Ky., Feb. 19, 1840. On April 1, 1862 he joined the United States Army.

Mr. Oakes was a good Christian man loved by everyone who knew him. He was a member of the Methodist church and was ready to meet his Savior.

Every thing that willing hands could do was done, but the Dear Savior would not let him in his midst and carried him to his heavenly home where no pain and sorrow is no more.

He leaves a wife and ten children to mourn his loss, all of whom are John, Ben, Will and Ed. Oakes, Mrs. T. E. Cecil, Mrs. R. L. Young of this county, Mrs. J. Perkins, Ind., Mrs. Joe Peck, Mich., Mrs. C. E. Willson, Paris, Ky., Mrs. J. S. Meredith, of Broadhead.

Weep not for me dear loved ones. As those whose hopes are vain, For in that shining country, I'll meet you all again.
 A Loving Friend.

MRS. R. K. CONN CELEBRATES 70TH BIRTHDAY.
 On last Thursday, February 21th, Mrs. R. K. Conn passed her seventieth birthday. The day was made memorable by a happy surprise being given her. By noon forty two of her generous friends and relatives had gathered at her beautiful home on Stanford Street and after partaking of a sumptuous feast the afternoon was delightfully spent.

She was beautifully remembered by many handsome presents. Mrs. Conn is a native of Garrard, having lived here all of her life. She united with the Christian church in her early life and has been a faithful soldier. Fifty years ago last Nov. she was married to Mr. R. K. Conn also of this county and eleven children have blessed their union, all of whom are alive, eight of whom are present, also "Uncle Step" Conn, who was Mr. Conn's nurse quite a few years ago.

That Mrs. Conn may have many more happy birthdays is the wish of Viola and Sallie.

WELL-KNOWN FARM.
 Rich tract of Garrard County Land Is Put On Market.

Until a few years ago to see sleek fat cattle in this section of Kentucky called for a thought of William and Richard Beazley, of old Garrard, more familiarly known as "Fony and Dick." Their big blue grass farm on the Lexington pike, near Lancaster, was famous for the best beaves.

Less than a decade ago these Beazleys sold their waving acres and bought the famous McGrathiana Farm in Fayette, which they in turn disposed of at a big profit and took over the equally noted Shenandoah Hall Place, near Lexington. Always with an eye single to making the soil they owned richer each year, the Beazley Brothers never had any trouble finding a good buyer for their ready holdings.

Their Garrard farm, well divided, fell into different hands. About three years ago R. E. Hughes, of Louisville, who had been reared in Lancaster, bought that portion of the Beazley farm, closest to Lancaster—only a mile from the Garrard court house, with a frontage on both the Lexington and Sugar Creek pikes.

The Beazley influence was still upon the land and Mr. Hughes, emulating their example, began to enrich the soil as his predecessors had, putting it in grass, and beginning the fattening of cattle thereon and from a monster concrete silo, which he erected. He expected to build a home on these rich acres, move his family from Louisville, and enjoy life under the velvety magic of grazing herds.

Recently Mr. Hughes had such a tempting offer to change investments that he determined to continue life in the metropolitan districts and abandon the peace of rural habitation. His portion of the famous Beazley farm is therefore offered for sale. An advertisement from the well-known real estate firm of which his father is a member—Hughes and Swinebroad of Lancaster—appears in this issue of our paper.

Although farm lands have not been active for the past 18 months, an offering like this will probably not lack for interested investors. If you want something worth more than the price you had better telephone, write or call on the agents Mr. Hughes has employed.

WARD-ROSS.
 The marriage of Mr. Ed Ross to Mrs. Hattie Ward, both well known residents of this city took place at Lancaster last Thursday. Rev. G. G. Scatter, pastor of the Christian church of that city officiating.

The happy couple left immediately for New Orleans, where they will spend their honeymoon and enjoy the Mardi Gras festivities. They have the congratulations and best wishes of their friends here, who wish them a long and happy life.

News Of The Churches.
 The members of the New Antioch church of McCreary will have an exchange Saturday afternoon March 11th, at the store room recently vacated by Dickerson and Carrier.

Rev. C. E. Shoeks will preach at New Antioch, Sunday morning and evening. Everybody invited to come.

GOOD LUCK IN DISGUISE
 By CATHARINE CRANE.

The military ball at the governor's mansion was at its height. As a waltz ended John Warren and Anne Madison went from the ballroom down to the library in response to John's plea for a few moments alone with his partner.

"Anne, you wouldn't have refused to give me a second dance unless there was something wrong," began John. "Tell me how I've offended and let me expiate my shortcomings, won't you?"

"I'm going to be perfectly frank, John," and Anne's brown eyes looked straight into John's gray eyes. "It's that silly old dog law you introduced into the legislature."

"Why, dear—Anne, you mean you've turned against me just for that?" John's pleading question was almost a gasp.

"Not I, John, but daddy has. Oh, you should hear him rave about it. If it wasn't so—so unpleasant to hear him, it would be really funny."

"What does he say?"

"Oh, something like this for a starter: 'John Warren ought to have his block knocked off for introducing that fool dog law into the legislature. It's an outrage! Here am I, a gentleman who keeps his hounds and setters and pointers in kennels and under control, yet he would make me pay a ridiculous fee for the privilege merely because some shiftless farmer in some corner of his county keeps a hungry mongrel that breaks into somebody's flock of sheep!'

"But today, when he found that the dog law was coming up for final consideration tomorrow," continued Anne "he said: 'If John Warren lets that bill come to its third reading he shouldn't show his face here again, and I want you to understand, Anne, that I'd rather you'd be less friendly with him than you have been of late.' You see, it's 'love me, love my dogs' with daddy, but he makes so few requests of me, John, that I can't hurt him by seeming to disregard his wishes. I think we'd better go back to the ballroom now."

John reluctantly acquiesced, and they returned to the ballroom with heavy hearts, for that very day the law had been laid down to him by three of his most influential constituents who were owners of large sheep ranches and had suffered great losses from ravaging dogs, and his only path to congress lay by way of the approval of these constituents and the votes they could command.

He returned to the library to try to think of some way out.

He thought of Anne dancing around this minute with some other man, and he felt that a chance to win her was worth any sacrifice.

When the next morning's session opened, things went on with a smoothness that provoked John Warren. His ranchmen constituents were in the visitors' gallery, and Anne's father was also there. John set himself to accept the inevitable and went carefully over the notes for his speech which was to close the arguments on House Bill 317. Just as the speaker was ready to call "Third reading of bills" a young man presented an official-looking paper to the doorkeeper, who arose at once and announced: "A message from his excellency, the governor."

The message was read: "In the hope of averting what might become a serious menace to the public health, I, Jason Brooks Lancaster, governor of this state, do hereby urge speedy recess of the legislature for the full three days' period permitted by law, so that precautions may be taken to prevent the spread of the disease of smallpox, of which five well-developed cases have been officially reported this day among the clerical force of the legislature."

Great confusion followed the reading of the message, and there was no disposition on anybody's part to delay a motion to adjourn. John Warren was informed by a clerk that his first vote to quarantine that morning. Nobody knew how the disease had been contracted by any of its victims. Henry Madison lost no time in getting out of town with his daughter, fearing a quarantine would be declared. Three days later, at their country home, he started Anne out of a deep reverie as he came into the library with the morning paper in his hand.

"By George, Anne," he began, "just listen to this: 'Senator Alonso Perkins of the Ninth district and Representative John Warren of Chairmore county are the two latest victims of smallpox, which broke out last week among employees of the legislature. Despite the important legislation in which these members are actively interested, they will have to observe the closing weeks of the present session from quarantine, three miles outside the city limits.'"

Without looking at Anne's white face, her father chuckled and added, "Well, I guess that settles the dog law for a while, anyhow."

"Daddy!" exclaimed Anne with such severity that her father looked at her astonished. "How can you think of dogs when the dearest right on earth is—oh, he may be dying right now."

An understanding smile slowly overspread Henry Madison's rugged face. "No, daughter," patting her on the shoulder, "it's not at all serious with proper treatment; it's serious only in its contagiousness."
