A Power For Good.

The pills that are potent in their action and pleasant in effect are DeWitt's Little Early Risers. W. S. Philpot, of Albany, Ga. says: "During a bilious attack I took one. Small as it was it did me more good than calomel, blue mass or any other pill I ever took and at the same time the effect was pleasant. Little Early Risers are certainly an ideal pill." SHOT CROPPER.

Alvin Shearn Puts Bullet Into Geo Jackson and Is Claiming Self-Defense.

In an altercation last Friday about noon between Alvin Shearn, a young farmer, and Geo. Jackson, one of his tenants, near Skillman and about six miles west of this city, Shearn shot Jackson in the breast, firing one time with a pistol. Shearn says that Jackson refused to comply with a crop contract between them, claiming that part of it was a forgery. This started the trouble, Shearn claims, and Jackson advanced on him with a drawn knife, when he shot him in self-defense. Jackson's side of the story has not been made public.

Immediately after the shooting Shearn went to Hawesville and gave himself up. He was released on bond, but some believe he may have trouble and expense to prove self-defense, as there are always two sides to a case like this. Shearn, however, has always borne an excellent reputation, while Jackson is said to be a dangerous man.

Shearn shot Jackson just below the heart, it is reported. Saturday Jackson wanted to make his dying statement to a magistrate, but the magistrate wouldn't come, as he believed the wound wasn't dangerous enough. Jackson is a native of the back part of Hancock county, where, it is said, men don't often die with their boots on.

Marshal Gilliland says that he is satisfied Butler made the whiskey he sold, but that he cannot prove such to be the case. The deputy marshal watched in the neighborhood of Butler's residence for some time in the hope of discovering the still, but failed to do so.—Saturday's Owensboro Messenger.

A Great Woman.

Men and women struggle to be known. They want to sit in the high seats of the synagogue. Even the disciples 1,900 years ago wanted to know who of them was to be the greatest.

But—

Position and place and power do not make persons great. The plaudits of the world are poorly directed.

For instance:

There is a woman who is a really great character, but whose name has scarcely been pronounced beyond the borders of the village in which she lives.

She is the mother of seven children. Widowed before any of her family was self-supporting, she cared for it, earning her livelihood by the labor of her hands. This labor was supplemented by good judgment and careful management, as everyone knows that the opportunity for earning money in the average village are limited. She not only reared her children respectably, but paid off some small debts contracted by her husband.

Her children have risen up in these later years to call her blessed. All are doing well. There is not a black sheep in the flock. And they all regard "mother" as the best woman who ever lived.

This is only a little chapter from the short and simple annals of the poor, but it may be asked who of those names that fill the sounding trump of fame in her state is greater than she?

Of course this brave woman gave no time to social matters. She had no time for that. She was busy working on soul stuff. She was engaged in building seven strong pillars for church and state. And she asked no recognition of the world save that of an honest woman, laboring and sacrificing for those she loved.

What it cost her of effort and self-abnegation, of short dinners for herself and close economies, no one will ever know. She never complained. And she did not have time to worry.

In the village where she lives this woman is taken as a matter of course. Her neighbors see nothing great in her career.

They forget the words: "He that would be greatest among you, let him become a servant."—St. Paul Daily News.

Political News From the County Seat about the Candidates and Campaigners.

Hardinsburg, Ky., Sept. 13.—(Special.)—Mr. Richard Owen, of Lewisport, candidate for the Democratic nomination for State Senator, was in town several days of last week. He says he is sure to get the vote of Hancock and Breckenridge counties, and thus win the nomination. His only opponent, so far, is the Hon. Gus W. Richardson, of Meade county. It is quite probable that no more candidates will enter the field. The election occurs next year.

Senator James B. McCreary, of Richmond, will make a political speech here on Saturday, Sept. 24 next. He is the ablest Democrat in Kentucky, among those who control politics in the state. Doubtless, a large crowd will hear him.

The new board of election commissioners for this county met here last Monday. The board is composed of Sheriff F. P. Payne, James St. Clair and A. H. Kincheloe. Routine business only was transacted.

If the election is ordered, it will be voted on throughout the county. Already great interest is being manifested by the voters on this question, and there is probably more discussion over it than there is concerning the presidential election.
