

AGED CITIZEN OF RAYMOND SUBMITS TO DEATH.

Leonard Cashman Died Friday Was Assessor of Breckenridge County Twenty-One Years.

Raymond, Ky., Nov. 11.—(Special) —Mr. Leonard Cashman, one of the oldest citizens of Breckenridge county, died at 8:20 o'clock Friday morning, Nov. 8, after an illness of several months. His death was due to cancer.

Mr. Cashman was assessor of Breckenridge county twenty-one years ago, but the latter part of his life acted as agent for John Vernia & Son, of New Albany. There was not a man in the county who had more friends and was liked any better than Mr. Cashman.

Last Tuesday's election was the first time he ever missed voting since he cast his first vote at the age of twenty-one years. He said, "Though I cannot vote, I would like to" and requested that his sons vote, but they would not leave his bedside.

October 25, 1861 he was married to Miss Margret A. Roy, who survives him with the following children: Mrs. C. M. Robbins, Oklahoma, Jesse, Henry, Mack and Ashmed Cashman, of this place.

The funeral was held Saturday at one o'clock, the services being conducted by the Rev. Roberts, of Stephensport, assisted by the Masons, of which order Mr. Cashman was a member. The interment took place in the Raymond cemetery.

Without A Motto.

"In God We Trust" is omitted from the new $10 gold piece just received from the Philadelphia mint. The new coin was designed by Augustus Saint Gaudens.

The only new $10 gold piece in Owensboro is in the possession of Mr. Marc Stewart, assistant cashier of the National Deposit Bank.

There are several explanations of the omission, but none of them official. One is that the Indian whom Saint Gaudens designed on one side of the coin had so many feathers in his head dress that there was no room for the motto. Another is that anything relating to the trusts is offensive to the present administration. Still another is that the motto has become inappropriate, since in these troublous times the administration knows not whom to trust.—Owensboro Messenger.

HARVEST HOME.

BEYOND the smoke and noise of town The tasseled cornfields lie And bronzy squares of stubble lands Stretch barrenly and dry, And every breeze that ruffs the grass With plenty rustles by.

THEE poppy flaunts its flaming head Along the garden wall, And one by one from laden trees The mellow apples fall, And in the tangled sumac brush The redbird pipes his call.

THE summer winds with rich perfume Through fields of plenty roam And kiss the waving wastes of grass That shine with golden foam, While all the boundless countryside Prepares for harvest home. —Selected.

THE DANCE OF THE SEASONS.

T WAS winter, but one moment past— Autumn—so little time gone by! Ere that the summer—spring—how fast! How fast the circling seasons fly!

THEY dance to music strange—I sigh! Borne on, amidst their giddy round Forever will they whirl—but I Some day with them shall not be found. —Edith M. Thomas.

DISCONTENT.

BECAUSE you cannot pluck the flower You pass the sweet scent by; Because you cannot have the stars You will not see the sky. —E. S. Phelps.

Good Manners.

Good manners are sometimes more than a veneer of politeness and conformity with the strict rules of the complete book of decorum. They should not be confounded with the fashions. The latter have been described as a perpetual setting up of a certain standard of taste "which yesterday was ridiculous because it was so new and tomorrow will be ridiculous from its being common." The modes change suddenly and capriciously, at the arbitrary command of some mysterious censor of style. Good manners in the essence survive from generation to generation. The well bred person of today is very much like his well bred forbears in essential things. A man or woman who performs an act of mere politeness awkwardly may exhibit fine manners. Good manners are good conduct according to the time and circumstances. The begrimed son of toil, riding homeward after a weary day, who surrenders his seat in the crowded car to a woman, to an aged or decrepit person, performs an act of true gentility which puts to shame many of the gracious things done in polished circles.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Killers.

It happened that once a man ran past Socrates armed with an ax. He was in pursuit of another who was running from him at full speed. "Stop him! Stop him!" he cried. Plato's master did not move.

"What?" cried the man with the ax. "Couldst thou not have barred his way? He is an assassin!"

"An assassin? What meanest thou?" "Play not the idiot! An assassin is a man who kills."

"A butcher, then?" "Old fool! A man who kills another man!"

"To be sure! A soldier!" "Dolt! A man who kills another man in times of peace."

"I see—the executioner." "Thou ass! A man who kills another in his home."

"Exactly—a physician." Upon which the man with the ax fled—and is running still.—From La Terre, Translated For New York Life.

Wanted More Orders.

Everybody knows one or more of those conscientious egotists who cannot rid themselves of the idea that no one can be trusted to carry out the simplest details of routine work without their personal supervision, says the Woman's Home Companion.

It was one of these men who sailed for England leaving in his brother's care a parrot of which he was very fond. All the way across the Atlantic he worried about the bird, and no sooner had he landed at Southampton than he rushed over this cablegram to his brother: "Be sure to feed parrot." And the brother cabled back: "Have fed him, but he's hungry again. What shall I do next?"

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all others put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful.
