THE DRUNKARD'S DREAM.

[EXCHANGE.]

The drunkard dreamed of his old retreat Of his easy place in the tap-room seat, And the liquor gleamed on his glowing eye, Till his lips to the sparkling glass drew nigh,
He lifted it up with an eager glance,
And sang as he saw the bubbles dance.

Alas! I am myself again!
Here's a truce to care, an adieu to pain,
Welcome the cup with its creamy foam!
Farewell to work and a moosey home;
With a jolly crew and a flowing bowl In bar-room pleasures I love to roll!

Like a flash there came to the drunkard's side, His angel-child who that night had died,
With a look so gentle, and sweet and fond,
She touched his glass with her little wand;

And off as he raised it up to drink, She silently tapped on its trembling brink, Till the drunkard shook from foot to crown,
And set the untasted goblet down.

"Hey man," cried the host, "what meaneeth this?
Is the covey sick, or the dream amiss?
Cheer up my lad, quick bumper quaff!"
And he glared around with a fiendish laugh.

The drunkard raised his glass once more,
And looked at its depths as so oft before;
But started to see on its pictured foam, The face of the dead little child at home.

Then again the landlord at him sneered And the swaggering crowd of drunkards jeered,
But still as he tried that glass to drink, But the wand of the dead one tapped the brink!

The landlord gasped, "I swear my man, Thou shalt take every drop of this flowing can!"
The drunkard bowed to the grieving brim, Though his heart beat fast and his eye grew dim,
But the wand struck harder than before The glass was flung on the bar-room floor.

All around the ring the fragments lay,
And the poisonous current rolled away.
The drunkard woke. His dream was gone, His feet were bathed in the light of morning,
But he saw as he shook with pale and fear
A beautiful angel hovering near.

He rose, and that seraph was nigh him still,
A beautiful angel hovering near.
him still,
It checked his passion, it swayed his will,
It dashed from his lips the unadvised bowl,
And victory gave to his ransomed soul.

Since over that midnight hour he dreamed,
Our hero has been a man redeemed;
And this is the prayer he prays always And this is the prayer let us help him pray--
That angels may come in every land, To dash the cup from the drunkard's hand.

MEETING AN ORATOR.

BILL NYE TRIES TO CONSOLE AN UN-KNOWN ON THE TRAIN.

Then From His Advance Agent William Leaves the True History of the Man Who Wanted to Talk on the Red Indian.

Copyright, 1893, by Edgar W. Nye.

Riding early on the vestibule train and dressed in a neat and even expensive ward, as I know do, I saw in the section about a half looking man who might have been 19 or 21, I could not tell. He looked at his watch, a young lady's hunting case watch, with a chain made of human hair that needed a shampoo.

"Afterward the Fly-Capper-Sigh, of which he was a member, gave him a banquet. (They had previously invited him, and so could not very well refuse.) He went, though there was a wild, hunted look in his eyes as he started. The banquet was not quite ready, for, as the steward of the restaurant said, 'The Cove oysters had not come yet,' so Napoleon sat in the afternoon, and went west by examining the menu as they were taking a farewell look at him before the lid was screwed down.

"He was very cold and quite hungry, not having eaten anything since he had agreed to deliver the lecture, but they put him at the cold end of the room by the side of a frayed president, who made notes on the back of his menu and frightened out of Napoleon what little intelligence he had left.

"The restaurant was a very poor one indeed, and the china had large dark chips broken out of it by people who had tried to drive in picture nails with it. The courses were widely segregated, and the dishes came on each time warm and hurried and panting, as who should say: 'We may be a little slow about it, but we do not miss a single course. We also aim to please.'

"Well, to make a long story short, the agony could not be drawn out any longer, and finally the president rapped on the table with the iron handle of his already exhausted knife and said, 'We have with us this evening--just as though they had been in the habit of entertaining all the crowned heads that came to town.
Then he spoke briefly and tersely of Napoleon and introduced him as the silver-tongued representative of the Fly-Capper-Sigh League.

"Napoleon arose, wiped his cold lips with a napkin, and taking the tablecloth with one hand by the corner he jerked it about due east as the crowd flung, gave the shriek of a demon, and trying the table linen against the throat of the president choked him to death. Then picking up a whole mustard pie he struck a little fellow on the opposite side of the table so as to fill the air to overflowing, caught hold of a carving knife and fled through the village, cutting holes in constables and biting elderly people on their way home. He has cleared out two asylums already, and now he is on his way to Waupun. He still thinks, poor boy, that he is to lecture at Jasper tonight and that if he should disappoint them he will be out $10."

The Man-Eating Tigris.
A correspondent to the Allahabad Pioneer mentions the career of a young tigris who, in the space of nine months, killed some dozens of human beings, depopulated several villages, and stopped work over a greater part of a forest division in spite of the most strenuous efforts made to destroy her--efforts increased by an incentive of five hundred rupees reward offered for her head. She began her career in July by killing two women near a forest village, and by the end of the following December had killed at least thirty persons, becoming bolder and more cunning with each fresh murder. Her beat lay at the foot hills of the Himalayas, and she roamed over an area of thirty-five miles long by three or four broad. The country was such that she neither could be tracked for any distance nor driven by elephants or beaters. She would not kill a tick buffalo, nor would she go back to a corpse if once disturbed.
She became at last so bold that she would in broad open daylight carry off men and women when cutting the crops in the terrace fields, stalking the unfortunates from above and suddenly springing on them. The terror of her ferocity spread the country.
The villagers left their homes for saler regions, and no wonder, for the writer found on one occasion a village seemingly deserted, but in reality in a state of siege, the inhabitants being afraid to draw water from a stream one hundred yards from the houses.
Work was commencing in the forests, and in a short time the tigris learned to stalk the sound of an ax, and made many victims before the forest was proven to be even more dangerous than the fields had been. The method of attack adopted was so sudden as to prevent any possibility of escape, the blow dealt so suddenly as to render even a cry for help impossible. The victim was dead and carried off before his companions knew what had occurred. The most strenuous efforts were made for her destruction-- poison, spring guns, and dead falls were resorted to, any number of bul-fals were tied up night, and many a time was the fresh trail of a kill taken up in hopes of gaining a shot at the tigris, but with no further result than that of recovering a mangled or half-eaten corpse. During January and February this tigris had killed fifteen or twenty more persons, and at least a file of soldiers was requisitioned to see what force could do to remove this horrible animal, cunning having been found of no avail. On being killed she was found to be a young animal in perfect condition. The pad of her left forefoot had at one time been deeply cut from side to side, but had thoroughly healed leaving, however, a deep scar, which proved her presence wherever she roamed. The writer mentions one instance in which two cowherds, living in a small grass hut in a somewhat wild forest, were cooking their food in the evening when a tiger sprung on one of them and carried him off. His companion intimidated the animal with shouts and threats and succeeded in making him leave his victim. Carrying his wounded companion into the hut, the man closed the entrance and waited for daylight. But this he never saw, for, after a time, the tiger emboldened by the increasing darkness, returned and forcing his way into the hut, carried off the uninjured man, who was doubtless doing all he could to ward off the tiger's approach. The other who was first seized died of his wounds and of terror the next day, after relating his story to those who had found him. "Of the man-eaters I have known, none have been old or decrepit animals, driven to feed on human beings because they could not obtain other food. They lived in a country full of game, and where cattle were plentiful, but they had lost their fear of man, and trusting in their superior strength and cunning, had no difficulty in satisfying their hunger. At the same time they seemed to realize that an armed man was dangerous, and that they must be on their guard to avoid falling into a trap. It is this apparent knowledge of man and his habits, amounting in some instances almost to reason, that renders a maneating tiger so terrible."

A Run on a Bank.
[ST. LOUIS GLOBE-DEMOCRAT.]
"Those who read about runs on banks," said George M. Stanley, "think only of the excitement on one side of the counter, and have but little idea of what goes on on the other side of it. Some fifteen years ago I was a clerk in a small bank in Montreal, upon which there was a steady run. Beyond saying with the Scriptures, 'An enemy hath done this,' we could give no explanation for the attack, because the bank, although small, was in a healthy condition. Every large depositor, however, wanted his money out at once, and an hour before closing time it became evident that we could not possibly hold out, unless a large amount of currency and gold coin could be obtained right away. The cashier mingled with the crowd, and assured the londest talkers that the bank could pay dollar for dollar, and other means were adopted to allay suspicion. These, however, were of no avail, and the entire staff, which was not very large, realized that the end was near. Just as we did this, relief occurred in a very remarkable manner.

"Our president, who was a man of high standing in the community, was not at the bank that day, but hearing of the run came in. He was one of those men who was evidently cut out for a leader or a ruler, and his influence was felt in a moment. Addressing the crowd, he absolutely ignored the danger of suspicion, and told those in the rear who were in a hurry to bring up their checks to him, and he would exchange them for his own personal checks on another and larger bank in the city. Two or three accepted this offer, but the balance of the crowd was so impressed with his coolness and evident good faith that they seemed rather ashamed of themselves and went away. We closed up that night with a nominal balance in the safe, but before morning we had secured a large sum in specie, and several who had drawn out the afternoon previous paid in their money again. The bank is still in existence, and is probably as safe as any small bank in the country."

Draining and Convoluted.
The at-peace with the world feeling existing in the bosom of W. H. Brown, Vicks, Iowa, when he writes: "The doctors pronounced mine a severe case of blood poisoning caused by kidney disease. Kept my bed two months. They gave me up to die when I got Dr. Foster's Kidney and Bladder Cure. Soon commenced discharging matter in the urine. After taking five bottles, I got all right, well and sound. It regarded as a wonderful cure. I was expected to
