STORIES DIDN'T AGREE.

How the Elevator Man Got the Sub-Editor Into Trouble.

"I've a good notion to get a gun and shoot that elevator man," said one of the sub-editors in a rage as he tossed a bundle of proofs on the floor. "What's the matter?" asked an assistant. "What's he been doing to you now—making you walk up the stairs again?"

"No," roared the sub-editor. "But I'll make him walk up the stairs, if he isn't careful—up the golden stairs, at that."

"But what has he done to you?" again asked the assistant. "Surely you aren't going to send an elevator man to kingdom come just for nothing. What's all the trouble?"

"Oh, trouble enough," snapped the sub-editor. "Last night I took my wife down to a theater and came over to the shop to see if everything was going all right. I expected to go back in a minute, but when I got here I found that the 'old man' had left word to have me come over to his house if I came in; he had something to tell me about how he wanted the paper made up."

"Well, I hustled over, thinking I could get back before the theater was out," continued the sub-editor, "but I didn't. My wife came over here alone, of course, when the show was out, and mad, too, because I had let her wander around town alone so late at night. When she got in the elevator the blooming idiot who runs it, thinking he was doing me a good turn by making my wife believe I was sticking close around the office and tending to business, began to tell her where I was. 'Just went out a minute ago. He was with a couple of gentlemen. I guess they just went out to get a cigar or something.'"

"I found my wife waiting for me in the office when I came back. I began to apologize, of course, for letting her come away from the theater alone, and explained that I had been over to see the 'old man.' I thought she looked at me rather queerly, but she didn't say anything until I had finished. Then she gave me a sour stare and said: 'It's a pity you can't make your stories agree.' She told me about 'two gentlemen' with whom I went out to get a cigar, and in spite of all I can say now she thinks I was loafing around saloons down town in preference to being in a theater with her. She actually believes that lying elevator man rather than believes me."

"Perhaps that's because he hasn't fooled her as often as you have," suggested the assistant, and he just dodged a paper weight as he scooted out the door.—Chicago Times-Herald.

ALL FOR HER.

A Question of Domestic Supremacy—How Finally Settled.

"O, I guess I'm getting into the game now," chuckled the little man on the street car as he hugged his package and smiled at the sympathetic man with glasses who sat next.

"I don't quite understand, my friend."

"Of course not, but it's this way. You see it's a kind of an open question up at our house whether she or I is the head of the family, and we're both doing the cunning act just to feel our way. Christmas she had saved up enough of my own money to buy me some presents. What I got was a diamond ring that's so small that she had to wear it, a lot of toilet fixtures for our common sleeping room and a pair of kid gloves that happened to be her number. I took it all so meekly that she thinks she's the boss, and that I daren't enter a protest."

"Would it be well to assert yourself, just enough, you know?"

"Well, I should clearly enunciate! To-morrow's her birthday. See these bundles. All presents for her. There's a pair of trousers made to my measurement, three neckties, half a dozen big linen handkerchiefs, a pair of shoes that she could slip down and sit in, a 7-1-8 derby hat, a briarwood pipe and four pounds of smoking tobacco. They're all for her," and the little man laughed till he dropped most of his packages.

Next forenoon the same two happened to ride down town together, and the little man had his packages. "How did your wife enjoy the presents?" asked the sympathetic man.

"I don't see what business you have inquiring into my private affairs, sir. If I choose to get these things exchanged I don't have to advertise the fact."—Detroit Free Press.

The Glass Snake.

The superstition that the glass snake breaks in pieces at a sudden alarm and reunites its various parts after the danger is over, arises from the fact that when threatened with attack by a bird or animal this snake throws off its tail, which wiggles about on the ground and distracts the attention of the enemy while the snake makes its escape. This peculiar means of eluding attack is practiced also by two or three kinds of lizards. Both snake and lizards grow a new tail in a few weeks.

Theoretically, remarked the man who had lived in flats for years, "there are always two sides to a story. Practically, however, after you get above the fourth story, the inside doesn't amount to much." He spoke something lightly, as knowing the potency of an affectation of gayety and insouciance to lighten the sternest sorrows.—Detroit Free Press.

TIRED OUT AN OLD HAND.

Edison Was a Crack Operator in His Younger Days.

"I was an operator in the Memphis office when Thomas A. Edison applied to the manager for a place," said A. G. Roekefeller, of the Reminiscence club, St. Louis. "He came walking into the office one morning looking like a veritable hayseed. He wore a shirt, a pair of butternut trousers tucked into the tops of boots a size too large and guiltless of blacking. 'Where's the boss?' was his query, as he glanced round the office. No one replied at once, and he repeated the question. The manager asked him what he could do for him, and the future-great proceeded to strike him for a job. Business was rushing and the office was two men short, so almost any kind of a lightning-slinger was welcome. He was assigned to a desk, and a fusillade of winks went the rounds, for the joy was put on the St. Louis wire, the hardest in the office.

"At the end of the line was a man who was chain lightning, and knew it. Edison had hardly got seated before St. Louis called. The newcomer responded, and St. Louis started in on a long report, and he jumped it in like a house afire. Edison threw his leg over the arm of his chair, leisurely transferred a wad of spruce gum from his pocket to his mouth, picked up a pen, examined it critically, and started in about 200 words behind. He didn't stay there long, though. St. Louis let out another link of speed, and still another, and the instrument on Edison's table hummed like an old-style Singer sewing machine.

"Every man in the office left his desk and gathered round the 'jay' to see what he was doing with that electric cyclone. Well, sir, he was right on the word, and was putting it down in the prettiest copper-plate hand you ever saw, even crossing his t's, and dotting his i's, and punctuating with as much care as a man editing telegraph for country printers. St. Louis got tired by and by, and began to slow down. Edison opened the key and said: 'Here! here! this is no primer class! Get a hustle on you!' Well, sir, that broke St. Louis up. He had been 'raw-hiding' Memphis for a long time, and we were terribly sore, and to have a man in our office who could walk over him made us feel like a man whose horse had won the Derby. I saw the 'Wizard' not long ago. He doesn't wear a hickory shirt nor put his pants in his boots, but he is very far from being a dude yet."—Practical Electricity.

Not Great Meat Eaters.

In the neighborhood of Bourgoigne, France, meat is eaten but once a year. The peasants of Morvan eat meat but twice a year; the peasants of Sarthe, but once a year; the peasants of Auvergne, five or six times a year; the Bretons never, except rich farmers, who eat flesh on feast days.
