HEROIC RESCUE

Of Helpless Women And Children From a Rabid Dog.

Wallace West Risks His Life In a Single Handed Combat With a Mad Dog.

There are heroes besides those who face death on the field of battle. Sometimes they come to the front in the every day walks of life. Few who read of the brave deed recorded in this article, will hesitate to accord to Wallace West the meed of praise that belongs only to those of noble souls and heroic mold.

Last Sunday morning as the little country Sunday school at Bennetts-town was in session, the children busy with their lessons and the teachers with the minds on sacred things, a strange dog appeared in the open door. He was a large shepherd dog with bloodshot eyes, frothing mouth and suffering from the horrible convulsions of hydrophobia. With vicious snarls he began a ferocious attack upon the children nearest the door.

Pandemonium reigned. Women shrieked, children screamed, old and young, stricken with terror, fled for their lives, only to find themselves helpless to escape. Meanwhile the dog was snapping right and left, chasing the people over the benches. Crazed with fear, strong men lost their heads and the instinct of self preservation was uppermost in the minds of all. No, not all, for one young man placed himself between the rabid beast and his would-be victims and gave battle. Agile, strong and courageous, he leaped from side to side, eluding the vicious snarls until seizing a favorable opportunity he jumped upon the dog and closed his iron grip upon the back of his neck. Holding him at arms length, he dragged the dog towards the door and out of the house, while a man was sent hurriedly to secure a pistol. Choked into helpless submission, the dog was held until the weapon was secured and Mr. West placed it to the creature's head and shot him to death. His bravery and presence of mind saved the whole school, for no one was bitten, although there were many very narrow escapes.

It is not known how many other dogs were bitten, before the mad animal reached the church.

Mr. West is a young farmer of the Church Hill neighborhood.

SAW HIS SWEETHEART

And the Old Man Took a Crack At Him With a Pistol.

Young Dr. Pinner, of Weaver's Store, Tenz., has for sometime been in love with Miss Sartin, daughter of the merchant at that place. Mr. Sartin has looked with disfavor upon the love affair and has been trying to break it up but without success.

Recently he notified Dr. Pinner that his attentions must cease or there would be trouble. But love laughs at angry parents as well as locksmiths and he held another meeting with his sweetheart, despite the threats of the old man. Then they met Wednesday and sure enough Papa Sartin produced a weapon and attempted to give the doctor a job of picking bullets out of his own body. One shot was fired, but the aim was not "Sartin" and the ball went wild. Before the irate parent could shoot again, bystanders interfered and stopped him.
