A HAPPY MAN.

BY EDEN PHILPOTTS.

A succession of dry days was ended and already the wind, turning south of west, blew chill and told of rain. On a wild common, uplifted in untamed loneliness above the valleys, I stood and marked how the horizon of leaden blue merged slowly into the clouds that darkened above it. Yesterday the west had flamed at sunset hour; now increasing gloom hid the sun; and already one doubted whether it was the serene leaves that pattered on the heath, as they flew untroubled, or the noise of the first drops of the rain.

The ridges of the land, albeit turned to that somber tint, yet stood clear out above the dim winter green of the fields. The naked elms towered there; and yet, seen close at hand, they wore their hibernal garb no longer, for already bloom buds thickened and the rosy inflorescence was preparing to deck each giant with innumerable flowerets. Stipules were swelling in the heart of the woods; the honeysuckle budded; the elder's lush foliage, scorched a little by the last frost, expanded; a thousand budlets strained their cases and wrote life in every hedgerow; the blackthorn was foaming against the dark background of the woods.

I stood upon a heath and heard the song of the rain coming with the wind. It thrilled through dead heather, and its husky tintinnabulation was not unmusical; it sighed in the fallen acres of the red bracken; it whispered where silver birches stood, like columns of silver beneath their winter veil of amethystine twigs. These, like a robe of rain, wept around about them. Glittering hollies were scattered over the heath, first broke the covert edge hard by, and the highest color note that touched this scene was the glaucous bloom of juniper foliage.

The waiting before rain is a time of mystery, and at such moments I have seen, as it were, a sentient gleam touch these untroubled creatures of woods and wastes. Even as among the birds and beasts, so amid the trees, least herbs, and fleeting annuals knowledge moves, and with sighs and thirsty expectance, with closed petals or murmur of young leaves, they welcome the delayed thunder cloud and prepare to drink their fill. A figure moved upon the heath, and there came a young man to me. He whistled as he went, and smiled upon the face of nature, as though she, too, smiled. We met, and he bade me "good day" with such heartiness that I responded in like manner, and marched along his path to learn, if I might, the secret of his generous contentment and joy of life.

"The wind is cold, and the rain will be colder," I said.
 "Be it?" he asked. "Can't say as I've felt it strike chill; but no doubt 'tis so, since you say it."
 "A lonely place this," I remarked.
 "You might call it lonely in a manner of speaking," he answered; "but there's houses within a mile. My young—" He broke off and whistled again.

The man was absolutely of commonplace type and demeanor. He had been spreading manure on a meadow, and he carried his fork over his shoulder. Yet from him there beamed a wealth of happiness.
 I sought the subject most likely to cast him down.
 "Heavy work on the land soon," I said.
 "Ee'es, thank God," he answered; "more work, more money." Then I perceived that this man was for the moment sorrow proof.

Already gold flamed on the crest of the gorse, and the warm fragrance of it breathed out like a blessing.
 "A good sign," I said. "Perhaps you know that kissing's in season now the furze blooms?"
 He smiled indulgently.
 "'Tis always in season—so long as you've got somebody as'll kiss 'e," he answered.
 "Right! And you're one of the lucky ones?"
 He eyed me cautiously.

"Who might ye be, master?" he asked.
 "A workman."
 "What be your hours, then?"
 "All the 24."
 "Then you don't waste your time, I'll wager!"
 "We all waste our time. When you're not working you're wasting time."
 "No, by God, I ban't!" he said, with great conviction, and his thoughts turned inward.
 "And she's wasting her's, too—come, now!"
 He stared.
 "The murder's out, then!" he said.
 "How did you guess as we were tokened?"
 "Why, it's all over you, mate!"
 "'Tis true enough, for that matter," he confessed; "an' the best woman in the world, but I'm shamed that the thing do look so clear to the neighbors."
 "I know the signs. You're a lucky man, and I congratulate you."
 "'Twas on this very heath two days ago she said it."
 "'Twill never be a barren heath again to you, then."
 Cold rain began to sweep the evening light, and I retreated before it; but my lover went on his way indifferent and whistled at the darkness as it gathered, and at the wind as it wailed over those desolate spaces. He neither knew that rain was falling nor that the sun had set.

So the heart of man makes its own weather. To-day it turns night into dawn and laughter; to-morrow it saddens noon and moves darkly beneath its own storm cloud of suffering. The young man marched hand in hand with happiness; I moved through lonely avenues of grief; love and life beckoned him onward to the gates of spring; love and death led my spirit back into winter.—Chicago Tribune.
