KIDNAPED BRIDE FORTH FROM TOMB

THRILLING ROMANCE OF A GAL-LANT ITALIAN POLICEMAN.

By Dint of Much Running He Recovered the Fair Lady, Only to Find He had Spotted a Scene for a Cinematograph Company.

Let us call the "hero" police-constable X 24. What his number or alphabet was, or whether he even owned a number, does not in the least affect this story. Let this suffice: he was an Italian policeman, and the whole affair that followed happened at Via Sistina.

This was the beginning. Police-constable X 24 was patrolling his usual beat one morning in early August. The day was hot. It was too hot to walk except when one was compelled, too hot, indeed, for anyone to do anything at all, even for the pick-pocket to trouble about his craft.

On the opposite side of the road a dazzling procession of girls, dressed in white, and men in more sombre attire, was approaching. Police-constable X 24 cast on it an approving eye. A wedding procession was cheering on such a day as this.

At the head of the procession walked the bride, charming in white silk and leaning on her husband's arm. Behind followed the bridesmaids, and in a still longer line a large number of friends and relatives. Just about now the strange, or as P. C. X 24 would have expressed it, the decidedly suspicious behavior of a young man mounted on a bicycle, attracted the constable's attention. A jilted lover, instinctively thought the policeman, with a touch of professional pride.

Slowing down the cyclist neared the head of the wedding procession. Then suddenly, in much less time than it takes to relate, he leaped from his machine, rolled over the bridegroom, and, seizing the terrified little bride in his arms, leaped once more on to machine and made off as fast as safety would permit.

All this police-constable X 24 saw as one in a dream, so utterly dumbfounded was he at the daring, the audacity of the young man. The bridegroom's voice calling lustily for assistance awakened P. C. X 24 to the necessity for prompt action.

"It's a joke," protested the young man of the cycle.

Everyone joined in the pursuit, and soon a medley of bridesmaids, friends, relatives, bridegroom, and best man was frantically rushing down the street.

But first and foremost sped police-constable X 24, supreme in professional glory. The perspiration ran down his brow, and he panted hard for breath. That villain on the bicycle should feel the stern, hot arm of Italy's law, now centered in the extended one of police-constable X 24. A moment later he snatched the trembling bride from the villain's arms, and with his left hand clutched the man himself, now powerless in the presence of the law. Then the pretty bride opened her dark eyes and darted countless fires at the gallant hero.

"How dare you interfere?" she said. And P. C. X 24 stepped two paces back in surprise. Such base ingratitude passed his best criminal recollections.

"It's a joke," protested the young man of the cycle. "We don't want your interference, police-constable." "Joke or no joke," cried the officer indignantly, "I shall arrest you for attempting to abduct this lady."

At the police-station, P. C. X 24 felt that the day was indeed a very hot one. For everyone swore that the whole scene had been arranged, and, still worse, to supply a set of pictures to a cinematograph company.

QUEEN TIH TO BECOME AN ATTRACTION AT MUSEUM.

Found in Her Gold-Covered Coffin at Thebes After Nearly Thirty-five Centuries of Sleep Among the Dead.

The museum at Cairo, Egypt, is expectantly waiting to receive as a valuable addition to its rare collection of ancient relics the mummified form of one of Egypt's most famous of queens, Tih, wife of King Amenhotep III., of the XVIIIth dynasty, and mother of the famous heretical King Akhenaten, the Diskworshiper.

Two years ago Mr. Theodore M. Davis, who has directed the systematic search of the tombs at Thebes with such excellent results, discovered the tomb of Yuaa and Tuas, the father and mother of Queen Tih. This tomb contained, besides the actual mummies of these progenitors of famous kings, an incredible treasure of funerary furniture, richly carved and overlaid with gold. Last year Mr. Davis, with Mr. Edward R. Ayrton as his assistant, discovered the tomb of King Siptah, of the XIXth dynasty. This year Mr. Davis and Mr. Ayrton have made a more sensational find. They have discovered the tomb of the famous Queen Tih herself.

The famous Valley of the Tombs of the Kings, the Biban el-Mulak ("Gates of the Kings") at Thebes, the place where the remains of successive sovereigns of ancient Egypt from the sixteenth to the twelfth centuries, B. C., were buried, has become fruitful soil for the Egyptologist, who has found in the tombs deeply cut in the limestone rock, the royal bodies so long ago preserved and laid away. And it is either here or in the hiding places to which they were afterwards removed in order to save them from the depredations of tomb-robbars, that most of the actual bodies of the greatest monarchs of Egypt and of members of their families have been found in modern times.

The tomb in which the remains of Queen Tih were found is unimportant in itself, in no way comparing with the sepulchres of other monarchs near by, so that it may well be that it was not originally intended to be the resting place of so great a queen. But within it the explorers found the remains of the funeral state of Tih, and her body, lying covered with a golden diadem in the form of a vulture, whose wings encircled and clasped the brow of its mistress. She lay wrapped about with sheets of burnished gold, within a coffin, slightly molded to the form of her body, and encrusted with carnelian and colored glass set in gold. This coffin was originally placed within a wooden shrine or naos, of which the remains were found. Its sides were covered with stucco overlaid with gold leaf. The stucco was modeled in relief, with representations of the queen making offerings to the Aten, the sundisk which she and her son worshiped. These reliefs are of extraordinary beauty and delicacy. Of the other objects found in the tomb the most beautiful are the "canopic jars" to hold the entrails of the deceased, the lids of which are fashioned in the form of portrait heads of the deceased queen, which show us her features more perfectly than any other known representation of her. Unhappily the mummy itself tells us nothing; only the grinning skull and a heap of bones are left. All the contents of the tomb were found in a state of the utmost confusion. The burial place had been roughly disturbed by the orthodox priests of Amen, who, on the overthrow of the Aten heresy, invaded the resting place of the queen in order to hammer out from her funeral furniture the name of her heretical son. And, at some time unknown, water entered the tomb, rendering most of the wood-work rotten and reducing it to the condition of touchwood. Much of it, as well as the skull and bones of the queen, has only been saved by being coated with boiling paraffin wax, which soaks into the soft material and hardens it.

When African Bees Get Angry.

The native bee would appear to exhaust its entire stock of sweet nature in storing up honey, and a more spiteful little piece of natural history it would be hard to find, says the Rhodesia Herald. A few days ago a suburban dweller found this out to his cost. A clumsy native upset a hive and immediately the air was full of winged anger. The native was wise and cleared, but a poor unfortunate goat and a few pigs, quite innocent of the danger, lay on the plot and were soon covered by the infuriated honey-gatherers. The result was that the goat died and two pigs had to be killed.

BLOCKADED

Every Household in Hopkinsville Should Know How to Resist It.

The back aches because the kidneys are blockaded. Help the kidneys with their work. The back will ache no more.

Lots of proof that Doan's Kidney Pills do this. It's the best proof, for it comes from Hopkinsville.

M. W. Davis, of Eades & Davis, dealers in coal on East Seventh St., at the L. & N. R. R., and who lives at 508 North Main St. Hopkinsville, Ky., says: "I advise the use of Doan's Kidney Pills in all cases similar to that of my son, who for some time complained of backache and was troubled with a kidney weakness which was very annoying at night. We tried many different remedies and he was treated by the family physician but nothing seemed to do him much good. I learned about Doan's Kidney Pills and got a box at Thomas & Trahern's drug store. He used them and there was a noticeable improvement in a short time. After he had taken all of the contents that which had proved such an annoyance was entirely relieved. We consider Doan's Kidney Pills certainly worthy of strong endorsement."
