Pope Pius has regained his normal health and celebrated his 78th birthday Monday.

The University of North Carolina has conferred upon Vice President Marshall the degree of LL. D.

A 17-year-old boy at Cleveland, fishing in Lake Erie, was dragged from his boat by a big fish and drowned. The fish got away.

The border town of Matamoros, opposite Brownsville, Texas, was captured by Mexican rebels Tuesday. About 80 were killed on both sides. Five women fought with the rebels.

A new trial is being urged in the case of Chas. Becker, the former Lieutenant of Police, now in the death house at Sing Sing, awaiting execution for the murder of Herman Rosenthal.

Germany's new policy of Germanizing Alsace-Lorraine, France's lost provinces, has aroused a storm of indignation throughout France. An effort is being made to substitute German for French as the language of the provinces.

It is about time for Gov. McCreary to place armed patrols on duty in the river counties, with headquarters at Henderson. This is the one effective way to break up night riding. The longer the application of the remedy is delayed, the worse it will be.

King Victor Emmanuel, with his principal aide de camp, General Ugo Brusati, Tuesday made a flight in a military dirigible balloon at Bracciano, Italy. The king was greatly interested in the throwing of bombs from the balloon against fixed and movable targets below.

Big preparations are being made for a home-coming at Marion, the home of United States Senator Ollie M. James, during the week of June 14 to 20, inclusive. The event will be patterned after the recent home-coming held in Paducah. Among the features for the week will be daily concerts by Kyril's band of fifty-seven pieces. Senator James has been invited to be present.

Jack Johnson, negro heavyweight champion, has been sentenced to one year and one day in the state penitentiary at Joliet, and fined $1,000 for violation of the Mann "white slave" act. Sentence was pronounced on Johnson after Federal Judge Carpenter had denied a motion for a new trial. Johnson obtained two weeks time in which to prepare a writ of error and the bond for $30,000, on which he has been at liberty since his conviction, was allowed to stand. The sentence to the state penitentiary is the result of a recent order from Washington that all persons convicted in the federal court in that district should be sent to the state prison, owing to the crowded condition of the federal prison at Leavenworth. Johnson left the court room declaring he would not give up his fight for liberty. He is still out under bond.

Those Bad Spells.

Lebanon, Jct., Ky.—Mrs. Minnie Lamb, of this place, says: "I believe I would have been dead by now, had it not been for Cardui. I haven't had one of those bad spells since I commenced to use this medicine." Cardui is a specific medicine for the ills from which women suffer. Made from harmless, vegetable ingredients. Cardui is a safe, reliable remedy, and has been successfully used by weak and ailing women for more than fifty years. Thousands of women have been helped back to health and happiness by its use. Why not profit by their experience? A trial will convince you that Cardui is just what you need.

LUND'S LONG WALK

Five Thousand Mile Hike Through Wildest Africa.

Carried a Seventy Pound Kit and Had Adventures With Animals, Snakes and Cannibal Tribes—Feat Not to Win a Wager.

Emil Lund, a Rhodesian settler of thirty-six, has just completed a walk from Cape Town to Cairo, not in fulfillment of a wager or without money or to test a system of diet or training, but simply from love of adventure. He has been a soldier and scout since he was seventeen, serving in the second Matabele campaign in 1893, the Uganda rebellion of 1897-99 and the South African war.

He started from Cape Town and walked all alone right through the Cape province and the Transvaal to Rhodesia. Thence he continued through the Congo state, the Sudan and the Nubian desert to Egypt, a distance of nearly 5,000 miles as the crow flies. "My wish," he said, in telling the story of his great walk to a correspondent of the London Standard, "was simply to be the first man to accomplish the feat. I am proudest of having walked across the Nubian desert. That was the hardest tramp of all.

Until he left Elizabethville, in the Belgian Congo, he had a comparatively easy time, for he could obtain supplies, good food and good water; but beyond that point he had a very trying time. He had no porters, carrying all his own impediments, weighing seventy pounds. This alone is no mean task in a tropical and wild country. But he could get no natives to accompany him, owing to tribal hostilities being in progress.

During most of the time Mr. Lund was obliged to be a vegetarian, but he always had meat when he could get it. "Sometimes," he said, "I shot a buck; but I could only eat the liver which I broiled in the ashes of my fire. Having no salt, I cannot say that I enjoyed my food. In passing through the great forests I camped on the ground, lighting a large fire to keep off the wild animals. I had to be very careful to keep this going throughout the night. At early dawn I renewed my march, tramping continuously till about 11 o'clock. After that I used to hunt round, collect wood and cook my one daily meal. Then I slept till sundown. Lions and other carnivora do not usually attack in the heat of the day—they are asleep—and it is only when night falls that they set out in search of prey."

He met with a good many lions, but was never attacked by one. The idea that water will protect one from a lion is, he says, erroneous, for lions are excellent swimmers. In the Katanga district he was bitten by a black mamba snake and would probably have died, but he reached a native kraal and was treated by a woman who applied a decoction of herbs to the wound and cured him. She steadfastly refused to say what herbs she used or how she prepared them.

From Albertville the traveler made for Lake Albert, and here he had one of his most unpleasant experiences. He came across a powerful tribe, under the command of a very suspicious chief, who, before he would listen to him, put him through the "ordeal of dirt." This consists of eating a mouthful of earth picked up from the ground.

In the native mind this constitutes a form of oath, and it is believed that any one who undergoes the ordeal and does not speak the truth, will be condemned to an eternal diet of dirt. The ordeal is called "nkola donga." One of the worst troubles with which Mr. Lund had to contend was the venomous flies and insects which swarm in tropical Africa. He was bitten near the eye by a certain kind of malignant tick, and for a time was nearly blind. If he had not shortly afterward reached Fort Portal and obtained medical treatment he would probably have lost the sight of at least one eye.

A little farther in the course of his walk he fell in with the Baluba and Valesi cannibals. When they have a cannibal feast the victim is usually a man accused of some crime. In such a case the man is offered a draft of a poisonous decoction. If he takes a long drink the poison is inoperative, producing merely nausea. But if, from timidity or guilt, he drinks but a small portion, the effect is almost immediately fatal. Women are excluded from these feasts.

Making a wide detour of Lake Albert, Mr. Lund eventually arrived on the Nile, which he followed to Abu Hamed and then struck across the Nubian desert and came to the Nile again at Wady Halfa. There are but two wells on the route across the desert, and he had to carry with him three days' food and water supply. But he safely crossed the desert and reached Khartum, where he went into the hospital to patch himself up for the last stage of his journey, which he completed without further mishap.

Entertaining the Parson.

They were entertaining the minister at dinner, and after the dessert had been eaten little Johnny said: "Won't you have another piece of pie, Mr. Hobbs?"

The minister laughed. "Well Johnny," he said, "since you are so polite, I believe I will have another slice."

"Good!" said Johnny. "Now, ma, remember your promise. You said if it was necessary to cut into the second pie I could have another piece."

TULIP BULB STEW

Family Turns Pale With Fear After Eating It.

Imported Servant Nearly Kills Mistress With Decidedly New Culinary Invention—Takes "Onions" From the Wreng Bin.

Pastor Henry E. Jackson of the Christian Union Congregational Church of Upper Montclair, N. Y., is an enthusiast on tulips. He imports bulbs from Holland and grows new and strange variations on his farm. He arouses the envy of his neighbors with the beauty of resulting blossoms, which decorate the lawn of his home.

Mrs. Jackson is an enthusiast on the subject of Scandinavian servants. She imports them from Denmark, Sweden and Norway, trains them in her kitchen and arouses the envy of her neighbors by the neatness and accuracy of the domestic service in her home. Recently there was confusion, internal pain and a general indifference to enthusiasm in the parsonage as a result of a crossing of the wires of the household. The present subject of Mrs. Jackson's training efforts is Della Hansen, from out by Stockholm pretty near.

"Della," said Mrs. Jackson one evening, "there is enough of this cold beef left to make a perfectly beautiful Irish stew for breakfast. You remember I showed you how to make it two weeks ago. The onions in the bin in the cellar are sprouting frightfully and we must use them as fast as we can."

"Yaas," responded painstaking Della. "I ban make Irish stew. Tha' ri'."

She went stolidly about her duties. When Della bore the stew into the breakfast table next morning the family gasped with admiration. "It was savory with a rich pungent flavor which none of them had ever caught from an Irish stew before. Mrs. Jackson discreetly withheld her comment until Della was back in the kitchen.

"Isn't she a wonder?" she asked her husband. "She saw me make one only once, and she did not seem to be paying any attention then. I fairly had to lead her down to the cellar and point out the onions to her. Yet the dear thing has even improved on my recipe."

Beaming with sympathy over his wife's pleasure the domineer dished out steaming plates of the stew for the family. Mrs. Jackson took the first plate. She looked a little puzzled, but swallowed one mouthful. Then she looked frightened.

"Stop!" she exclaimed. "Stop! All of you! Don't swallow any of that stuff!"

Several others had morsels of the stew in their mouths. They, too, showed varied emotions on their faces. There was a general pushing back of chairs and the family departed from the table in a rush. There was an assembly half an hour later of everybody except Mrs. Jackson, who was the only one who had swallowed any of Della's concoction. She was so ill she had to lie down.

"Della," asked Mr. Jackson in all the impressive dignity of his six-foot athletic frame and his roundest pupil voice, "what did you put in that stew?"

"Ay tank," said Della calmly, "I ban besser show you what ban in it." In solemn procession she led the minister and his children to the refrigerator and showed them the shaved bones of the cold roast. She set out before them the pepper, salt, and flour from the shelves. She led them down the cellar stairs and pointed dramatically to the potato barrel and then marched across the cellar floor and pointed out where Mr. Jackson had kept the choicest of his imported and blended tulip bulbs.

It wasn't a bit funny at the time. But the Jackson family, now that their illness is over, are beginning to grin a little over it.

New Fuel—Perhaps.
A substitute for gasoline has been discovered, unless the inventor deceives himself. The name of the new substance is "gasene." It is an artificial product, built up from the various substances in crude oil, instead of being separated from the mass by distillation, as is the case with gasoline.

The inventor or discoverer claims that 60 per cent of a barrel of crude oil can be converted into gasene, whereas a yield of 10 per cent gasoline is considered good. He claims that the new substance can be made to sell at wholesale for 3 or 4 cents per gallon, and that it will work in all gasoline engines.

It sounds too good to be true—especially if one keeps an automobile. Some such invention or discovery is sure to come; but the world looked for it to approach gradually, not arrive all at once. Scientific men are justly skeptical, but the period of doubt can not last long. The claim has the merit of being easy to test.

More Laws.
"Beg pardon," said the conductor, "but you can't smoke cigarettes on a train in Indiana."
The passenger threw away his smoke.
"And I wish you'd tell your wife that she'll have to change that peek-aboo waist as soon as we cross the line into Ohio. It's against the law to wear 'em in that state."
